Punctures seal themselves with B.F. Goodrich Seal-o-matic SAFETY TUBES!

HOW SEAL-O-MATIC WORKS!

This X-ray photograph shows how an inner layer of soft, gummy rubber surrounds any puncturing object and seals the hole instantly. No chance for air loss. When the object is removed, the gummy rubber fills in the hole, sealing it permanently.

No need to worry about punctures when you're driving on B. F. Goodrich Seal-o-matic tubes! Seal-o-matics actually repair themselves instantly without so much as a thought from you.

NO AIR LOSS! When you pick up a nail or other sharp object, Seal-o-matic goes to work immediately. A gummy rubber closes around the puncturing object, keeps air in—and then seals the hole when the object is removed.

MUCH GREATER SAFETY! You're actually much safer when you ride on B. F. Goodrich Seal-o-matic tubes. There's less chance for chafing or pinching, because they're made thicker. And because Seal-o-matics heal themselves, there's no need to stop your car when punctures occur. No more changing tires on busy or unlighted highways. You just keep rolling along.

OUTWEARS TWO SETS OF TIRES! You can normally wear out two or more sets of tires before your Seal-o-matics need replacement. You get more miles—more safety—with a lot less worry and work.

GET THIS PERFECT SAFETY COMBINATION! With Seal-o-matic tubes in BFG Silvertown tires, you get the really perfect safety combination—tubes that give you extra safety—in tires with a stronger cord body that resists bruises and a road hugging tread that resists skids.

Your B. F. Goodrich dealer will be glad to show you how little it costs to equip your car with Seal-o-matic tubes. The B. F. Goodrich Company, Akron, Ohio.

"BECAUSE YOU LOVE NICE THINGS"

The new glove in your life is NYLON...

Under the sun and under the stars, the news is nylon—looking as delicate as a dandelion in the breeze, so soft, so frilly, so fabulous—so long on wear, so easy to care for. Like your sheer nylon stockings (and, of course, they're Van Raalte!), they wash and dry quick as a flick. In so many good spring and summer colors—in so many good stores. From top to bottom: Sheerio shorty with scalloped trim; Whisp-Net ruffled shorty; Sheerio with ruffled net cuff; all $2.50. Whisp-Net slip on with sweetheart ruffles $3.00.

—and Van Raalte is famous for underthings and stockings, too.

Hell Driver Number 1

"LET'S GO, MEN!" Toby Couture, the boss engineering test driver, climbs into his great New Plymouth and leads his caravan of expert drivers out onto the great open spaces.

His job starts when a new model is developed . . . long before it goes into production. He takes the cars out and gives them what his title implies.

Down into Death Valley, where the mercury hits the top of the tube. Up into coldest Minnesota, when zero is mild weather. Over mountains during the West's worst blizzard. Jolting over roads that are just some ruts between fences. Hunting for trouble . . . inviting and finding it . . . day after day.

Every night the engineers in Detroit hear how the tests are going . . . how every part of every car is standing up under the punishment. Later, the first Plymouths out of regular production get the same treatment . . . as a double check.

There is great engineering to start with. Then there is this terrific double testing and proving . . . with all America as the proving ground. It is only after this that the New Plymouth cars are permitted to go to the motoring public. That's why Plymouth cars stand up. That's why the man who buys a Plymouth is always glad he did!

HIGH-BROW, LOW-BROW

Sirs:

According to your intellectual classification chart ("High-brow, Low-brow, Middle-brow," LIFE, April 11), my penchant for fuzzy Harris tweeds qualifies me as a high-brow. However my subscription to The New Yorker sets me back into the upper middle-brow category. Yet, since there is a towel in my bathroom labeled "His," I must fall into the lower middle-brow class. But after all, since I'm fond of beer and overstuffed chairs, doesn't that tag me as hopeless a low-brow as any Neanderthal?

ALBERT ROSENFELD

Sirs:

You say that low-brow characters like coleslaw. I am an honest, qualified low-brow but I hate coleslaw. . . .

WILLIAM S. POWER

Sirs:

Your amusing article sent me to my scrapbook where I found the following taken from a Boston paper (no author given) about a generation ago.

"HIGH-BROW: Browning, anthropology, Bacon, inherent sin, Gibbon, fourth dimension, 'eyether,' pdté de foie gras, lemon phosphate, Henry Cabot Lodge, Woodrow Wilson.

"LOW HIGH-BROW: Municipal government, Kipling, Shakespeare, Thackeray, taxation, bridge, chicken à la Maryland, 'eether,' stocks and bonds, gin rickey, Theodore Roosevelt, chewing gum in private.

"HIGH LOW-BROW: Robert W. Chambers, musical comedy, Richard Harding Davis, eucyre, baseball, Anthony Hope, moving pictures, small steak medium, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, whisky, purple socks, chewing gum with friends.

"LOW-BROW: Laura Jean Libbey, ham sandwich, 'haven't come,' pitch, 'I and her,' melodrama, hair oil, the Duchess, beer, George M. Cohan, red flannels, toothpicks, Big Tim, Bathhouse John, chewing gum in public."

EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR!

Look over these beautiful, useful General Electric Clocks with Mother in mind! They are ideal gifts for any and all occasions, such as weddings, birthdays, anniversaries, and graduations.

There's a General Electric Clock for every purse and purpose.

INFORMER

This beautifully styled alarm clock is designed to blend with almost any home surrounding. The bell-alarm is soft, melodious—yet positive. The case is of gleaming ivory plastic, and the face is framed in polished brass. Luminous hands and hour dots for easy night reading. $6.95, plus tax.

CHEF

A kitchen clock and 60-minute timer that will save Mother countless steps and worry about cooking that MUST be timed to the second. Invaluable for baking, simmering, pressure-cooking, washing, preserving. The Chef stands guard and buzzes "It's done," loud and long! Hangs on the wall or sits on the counter . . . in red, ivory, green, and white. $7.95, plus tax.

GENEVA

A stunning clock finished in a burnished mahogany. The hands are gold-colored, contrasting with the bronze-colored numerals. Beveled case, with squared brass feet, gives this General Electric occasional clock a truly modern look. $9.95, plus tax. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Conn.

SARGEANT'S BROW

Sirs:

Withrop Sargeant's attempt to make esoteric dilettantism synonymous with culture is sheer nonsense. The appreciation of certain examples of art listed by LIFE as high-brow is related not only to taste but also to specialized technical education. For example, the professional musician is in a better position to appreciate the more recondite scores of Ives, Bartok and Schoenberg than the layman.

Mr. Sargeant banishes radio, except for its transmission of musical forms not generic to radio (symphony, opera, etc.) . . . It is true that radio is a popular disseminative medium and that advertising pays its bills. I have read some of Mr. Sargeant's articles in LIFE. By no stretch of the imagination could they be considered "high-brow." They were pop-

TESTS ON THOUSANDS OF BABIES IN OVER 100 HOSPITALS PROVE NEVER A CASE OF DIAPER RASH

SCIENCE DEFEATS DIAPER RASH BACTERIA

Science knows now that the real cause of diaper rash is the saprophytic bacteria (illustrated) on baby's skin that convert the urine into harmful ammonia. The wonderful modern antiseptic in Playtex Baby Oil, Powder, and Cream kills these saprophytic bacteria. Scientific tests on thousands of babies prove never a case of diaper rash with PLAYTEX!

YOUR MONEY BACK

if your baby ever develops diaper rash while using Playtex Baby Oil, Powder, and Cream exclusively.

This Handy Nursery-Pak... makes baby care a joy for mothers, too.

PLAYTEX BABY OIL is made with 6 times more soothing lanolin than any other baby oil sold.

PLAYTEX BABY POWDER is super-fine. Gently absorbs, is safely deodorant, and guards against chafing and prickly heat. Won't cake or clog.

PLAYTEX BABY CREAM is lanolin-rich, has a balm-oil base for all night protection.

ALL THREE contain the modern antiseptic that checks many skin germs.

Wonderful PLAYTEX® Products Get Top Scientific Approval

Modern Baby Oil, Powder, Cream Greatest Advance in Protection

Those amazing products, PLAYTEX BABY OIL, POWDER, and CREAM, are winning mothers all over the country.

Developed after years of intensive research, all three Playtex Preparations contain a remarkable modern antiseptic that helps check skin germs safely.

More than 100 hospitals and pediatricians conducted tests with thousands of babies. In these scientific tests, there was never a case of diaper rash when Playtex Baby Oil, Powder and Cream were consistently—and exclusively—used. And, in cases where diaper rash had already appeared, it immediately cleared up after the switch to PLAYTEX.

Think what this means to your baby's comfort and health!

Triplets' Mother, Mrs. Larry Serlin of 2555 Bainbridge Ave., N. Y., says: "My 3 girls are Playtex Babies from head to toe! With Playtex Baby Oil, Powder and Cream, they've always had the loveliest skin! Not a sign of rash or irritation... And let me tell you about wonderful Playtex Baby Pants, too—they're so soft and comfy, and of course, completely waterproof!"

Playtex Baby Pants Keep America's Babies "Socially Acceptable"

Made of pure tree-grown liquid latex, Playtex Baby Pants stretch all over, are light, cool, comfortable. And completely waterproof!

Wash odor-free in ten seconds, pat dry with a towel. Accurately sized by baby's weight. And you'll be astonished how long they wear!

Playtex® Air Nurse

Is 7-in-1 Nursemaid

A pocket-size miracle, Air Nurse inflates in a minute to a bed, a travel seat, a changing table—and more! It's actually a 7-in-1 nursemaid that takes care of baby, guards him safely and comfortably wherever he is. Playtex Air Nurse is air-and-water-tight. Your choice of pink or blue cotton covers.

Smart Modern Mothers Prefer Soft Playtex® Plastikool® Sheets

So light! So comfortable! So completely waterproof! Playtex Plastikool Sheets stay soft and pliable—even after hundreds of washings.

Nylon-reinforced, they're tear-resistant and wear-resistant. Plastikool sheets wash in a jiffy, dry with a towel. In three handy sizes.

Sirs:

In a recent speech Dr. Robert B. Heilman, head of the University of Washington English department, defended high-brows more successfully than your Winthrop Sargeant.

Dr. Heilman defined "good" high-browism as "the highest excellence that can be achieved in any field of knowledge. It is the devotion to truth, even though it be difficult, unprofitable, unconsoling, unflattering and entirely out of accord with dominant prejudices."

Snobbery and conceit are "bad" high-browism and should not be confused with the good variety, he said.

Dr. Heilman concedes most anti-high-browism is an honest grass roots affair. But he points out that the trouble is "grass roots won't grow oaks."

TURNER DIVORCE

Sirs:

Re the article "A Divorce Case" (LIFE, April 11): Will you please tell me what the parents decided after their 60-day trial period was up?

RITA SMALLINE

Rochester, N.Y.

● In the past few weeks events in the Turner divorce case have taken a turn for the worse, leading Judge Hamill to postpone his decision. On April 10, the day before the Turners were to reappear before the judge, a fire broke out in Mrs. Turner's mother's house, where Mrs. Turner was staying. The children were in Turner's care at the time. Mrs. Turner accused her husband of setting the fire after threatening to kill her and himself. He denied it. Police arrested him, gave him a lie-detector test which failed to shake his story that he was elsewhere when the fire started. Said Judge Hamill, "I hate to admit it but reconciliation looks impossible"—ED.

CROCUSES?

Sirs:

The caption, "North of Minneapolis the first crocuses bloom in the cold woods" (LIFE, April 11), would have looked better if the writer had included a picture of crocuses with it. The one above it was a beautiful shot of anemones or pasqueflowers.

JANE CRODTBUS

Boulder, Colo.

● Right. The correct name for Minnesota's flowers (above) is Anemone patens.—ED.

FRANCO SPAIN

Sirs:

LIFE deserves commendation for its fair and unbiased treatment of a thorny subject, "Spain" (LIFE, April 4).

Undoubtedly there has been a conspiracy against the truth in recent years in regard to the press's presentation of Spain's case. . . .

To say that the U. S. should not ally itself with General Franco, either as a friend or as a political partner, is to be either hypocritical or to show crass ignorance of the immensely helpful role that General Franco played in the last war in favor of the Western allies by keeping Spain "benevolently" neutral. . . .

Sirs:

LIFE has spread the jelly a little too thick in portraying the mighty El Caudillo, Exalted Dictator of España, as a sports-loving, good-natured man. It is a bitter pill that we are being asked to swallow. No doubt Spain is strategic, but rather than vie for the friendship of Franco why not court the pretender, Don Juan?

Oh, yes! I think you also portrayed Stalin and Company in the same light during the war if I remember correctly, and that dose really choked us.

M. ALLAN TURNER

Roanoke, Va.

Sirs:

The photo of General Franco clearly demonstrates the proper method of becoming a mere name inscribed in a marble orchard. Safety rules regarding loaded firearms are apparently unknown to the general and his companion. On the other hand, perhaps after the incident the companion was drawn and quartered for an attempt on the life of El Caudillo.

For greater thrills in golf—

Hit your wood and iron shots with a new confidence and authority—a new mastery! Play Wilson woods and irons with the Reminder-Gruv-Grip®—acclaimed by leading professionals as one of the finest improvements ever made in golf clubs.

Reminder-Gruv-Grip literally makes you grip the club correctly. Helps keep club face in proper position throughout your entire swing. That means cleaner, straighter, longer shots and scores that pay off. The "Gruv" feature (lengthwise grooves in the fine calfskin leather) enables you to grip the club firmly with lessened finger tension. Gives better control . . . greater accuracy.

Only Wilson clubs have the Reminder-Gruv-Grip.

*Conforms to U.S.G.A. rules. U. S. Patent Nos. 1,974,875 and 2,446,622.

This flat portion is the Reminder that helps keep club face always in correct position.

Strata-Bloc® AMERICA'S FINEST WOOD CLUBS

... accuracy unaffected by moisture or atmospheric conditions

Wilson woods, with their exclusive Strata-Bloc heads of multiple cross-crossed layers of selected hard woods (bonded into one piece by controlled hydraulics), Dynamic True Temper shafts and Reminder-Gruv-Grips, are America's finest wood clubs. Even the slightest degree of distortion in the face of a wood club can make well hit shots go many yards off line. Strata-Bloc woods maintain a true club face at all times—give accuracy to your shots and the maximum distance possible with a wood club.

Tested EIGHT YEARS under water, baked in intense oven heat (at 27° Fahrenheit), Wilson Strata-Bloc heads retained their precise shape. Positive assurance of unvarying wood club accuracy.

WILSON PRECISION-BUILT IRONS

Designed for their own use by world famous champions renowned as stylists and masters of iron club play, Wilson Precision-Built Irons are the last word in irons—played by top ranking golfers the world over. Swingweight balanced, with Dynamic True Temper shafts and the patented Reminder-Gruv-Grip, these master irons will ease your swing—lower your scoring average—bring new thrills to your iron play.

HIGH-SPEED MOVIE EXPOSURES, TAKEN AT INTERVALS OF 1/1,000TH OF A SECOND, SHOW HOW TEST SUBJECT'S LIPS ARE FORCED APART

SPEAKING OF PICTURES...

... THESE SHOW WHAT 300-MPH WIND DOES TO HUMAN FACES

READY FOR TEST. Navy volunteer faces metal vent of the wind machine and braces himself for the impending quarter-ton blast of its air stream. Protective eye pads used in the first tests were soon found to be unnecessary.

The grotesque portraits on these pages show what happens to a jet pilot's face when he bails out of a disabled plane and plunges into the roaring air stream around it. Actually the gruesome grimaces which give these faces their ultra wind-blown look were produced in laboratory tests which duplicated bail-out conditions of jet aircraft. At the Navy's Aeronautical Medical Equipment Laboratory in Philadelphia stouthearted volunteers were strapped to a reinforced seat and pummeled with a 300-mph blast of air while scientists took high-speed movies of their fluttering features.

The purpose of the Navy tests was to find out how much wind an unprotected face can stand. Earlier experiments, made with a plaster dummy instead of a living subject, showed that the conventional face coverings worn by pilots are useless in high-speed bail-outs; helmets, goggles and oxygen masks are sometimes blown off or torn to bits by air streams of 300 mph (next page). At first Navy scientists were afraid that a pilot's face would rip as readily as his leather helmet. The tests proved them wrong: even blasts of 350 mph and more do no real damage to resilient human flesh. The impact of the air twists features beyond recognition; the cheeks flap, the ears are stretched back, the mouth is forced open. But when the air blast is reduced, muscles and skin return quickly and painlessly to their normal state.

LIFE'S REPORTS

ELEPHANTS ARE NOT ONLY CEYLON'S SYMBOL BUT DO HER BULLDOZING

CONTENTED CEYLON

Horses live in zoos, elephants do the work, and this tiny new dominion loves the British

by ROBERT LUBAR

The people of Ceylon have three perversities. They run their railway locomotives backward half the time; they use elephants to pull wagons and keep horses in zoos, and they get along on terms of the greatest goodwill with the British.

The Ceylonese have excellent explanations for all three of these phenomena. Running locomotives backward spares the necessity for costly, space-wasting turnarounds. Elephants are plentiful and therefore available as beasts of burden while horses, due to a singular soil deficiency on the island, are rare and therefore curiosities. As for the British, their memory is cherished because their imperial dealings with Ceylon were unique.

When Britain scrapped the bulk of her Asian empire after the war, Ceylon became the smallest and youngest dominion in the Commonwealth. The event escaped wide notice, partly because Ceylon is so small (25,000 square miles) and many people were under the mistaken impression that it was part of India anyway, but mostly because the transition to freedom was so well cushioned with goodwill. The continuing friendship was reflected recently when the island celebrated the first anniversary of its independence: a British cruiser was welcomed into the harbor of Colombo, the island's capital, with a 21-gun salute and the Ceylonese, with plenty of native songs to choose from, preferred to sing God Save the King. A few weeks before that a British parliamentary delegation had presented the young dominion parliament with an ornately jeweled mace and a speaker's chair, a gift which the Ceylonese accepted with the pride and gratitude of a youth whose father has given him his first safety razor.

The Ceylonese have never had either the arms or the resources to fight off foreign rule, and since their island is rich and accessible their history is full of invasions. Moreover the Sinhalese, who are the majority of the population, are steeped in Buddhist nonviolence. Recently a carrier pigeon was shot down while carrying a message inland from Colombo. Hundreds of outraged villagers gathered to bury the bird and, after mourning it, set out to hunt its slayer.

The architect of Ceylon's freedom after seven centuries of domination by India, China, Portugal, Holland and finally Britain, was Sir Ponnambalam Arunachalam, one of the most nonviolent revolutionary heroes in history. Born in 1853, he was a civil servant in the British administration and so efficient that he was knighted by the king. But while he performed his job, he worked subtly on the side to persuade the British to grant more and more self-rule to Ceylon. To show that he had no hard feelings while he was carrying on this campaign, he sent his grandson—now an editor of a leading Colombo daily—to be educated in England.

By the time he died in 1924, Sir Ponnambalam had softened the British up to the point where, in 1931, they allowed the Ceylonese to elect their own parliament and ministers by universal suffrage. The voting rolls included a great many illiterates although Ceylon's literacy rate (50% in the cities and 25% in the countryside) is very high for Asia. To assist them, the electoral law provided that candidates had to enter on the ballot not only their name but also a symbol, such as an elephant, a tiger, a monkey or a tree.

Sir Ponnambalam's "revolutionary" work was carried on by heavy-lidded, shrewd Don Stephen Senanayake, now Ceylon's first prime minister. In World War II he urged the Ceylonese to give the British all the help they needed. The island became an important fleet base, an invasion area and an admirable headquarters for Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten's Southeast Asia Command, which settled down in the botanical gardens of the picture-book hill town of Kandy. "British gratitude," Senanayake says, "was so great they couldn't resist freeing us."

The British exit was so graceful that some Ceylonese almost seemed to miss the ruling hand. Sir Oliver Goonetilleke, Ceylon's high commissioner in London, meant it when he gushed, "There'll always be a little corner of England in Ceylon." There is still as big a colony of British businessmen in Colombo today as in the heyday of imperial rule, selling chemicals, dynamos, soap and toothpaste. The Ceylon government has given them the concession they probably appreciate most: a low duty on Scotch whisky. In Colombo's Grand Oriental Hotel a chota peg costs the equivalent of only 40¢, which is hard to beat anywhere.

There is a little corner of Britain even in the Dominion Parliament, a handbox version of Westminster complete with liveried usher, wigged speaker and Hansard. Ceylonese politicians strut their Orders of the British Empire and zealously keep the "Sirs" before their names. Fathers still send their sons to Oxford and Cambridge and boast of their own university records.

A small fringe of ultranationalists are offended by these vestiges of Britishism. The Ceylo-

 A QUIETER RIDE.

"Heading out U. S. 40 to Kansas City, my engine actually loafs! That's because overdrive cuts down the number of revolutions. When I hit 60—the engine ambles at 52. 10 or 12 50 m.p.s. an hour, it purrs along at 35. Engine noise and vibration seem to disappear."

TRAFFIC'S EASY.
 OVERDRIVE DOES MOST OF MY SHIFTING.

"Even on McGee Trafficway, I use the clutch only when I have to stop. I get into second and stay right there. Overdrive second shifts in as soon as I need to go faster. Slowing down cuts in regular second again. All automatic ... all simple and easy."

OVERDRIVE GIVES ME THE ZOOM I WANT
 FOR PASSING.

"I get around them fast. Just pushing the gas hard automatically gives me direct drive power. Yes sir, I can say that B-W Overdrive suits me 100 percent. And it actually hasn't cost me anything. I figure it has paid for itself in the first 20,000 miles."

2 million car owners enjoy these benefits with
 B-W Overdrive—

- ✓ Boosts gas mileage—up to 30%
- ✓ Cuts fatiguing engine vibrations in half
- ✓ Makes driving more fun—anywhere
- ✓ Delivers full emergency power instantly
- ✓ Saves engine wear and repair
- ✓ Driver's choice permanent "on" and "off" dash control

nese, however, have made a habit of assimilating bits and pieces from their conquerors. When the Hindus swarmed down from South India, the Sinhalese Buddhists let them build temples to the Hindu God Siva among the Buddhist altars. When the Portuguese came, many Sinhalese decided to take Portuguese last names. From the Dutch, Ceylon inherited solid, graystone Dutch Reformed Churches in all the big seaboard towns and a flourishing colony of half-castes, who are called burghers in memory of their forefathers.

The thing which causes Ceylonese ultranationalists to bristle more than anything else is the British naval base at Trincomalee, Ceylon's fine east coast port. But many Ceylonese explain Trincomalee as a young Colombo merchant dul, "If the British didn't lease it, we Ceylonese would have to keep our own naval establishment at Trincomalee. As it is, we have to devote only 2% of our budget to military preparations and have plenty left for health and education."

Most of Ceylon's ultranationalists are in the far left, which makes up the bulk of the government's parliamentary opposition. The leftists polled 22% of the popular vote in the 1947 general election, largely because their glib-tongued orators had charmed the disgruntled war workers who had been thrown out of their jobs when the Allies left Ceylon at the end of the war. Prime Minister Senanayake's government, however, is confident that 1947 figures represented the peak of leftist strength. A cabinet minister said, "Buddhists teach that one's station in life was predetermined by his conduct in a previous incarnation. That doesn't leave the Communists much room to exploit discontent."

The operations of the left are curtailed also by the fact that their own ranks are quite hopelessly split. Three Red factions are constantly tearing each other apart: the official, Moscow-inspired Communist party (which is the smallest); the Bolshevik Sama Samaj (Equal Society) party, formerly called the Bolshevik-Leninist party; and the Lanka (Sinhalese for Ceylon) Sama Samaj party, largest of the leftist organizations.

As a result it is not unlikely that a fourth perversity may soon be added to the Ceylonese way of life: the divergencies of opinion on the left have gone so far that the opposition cannot even get together to pick a leader. In the name of parliamentary order, Prime Minister Senanayake's government may have to step in and pick one for them.

LIFE'S COVER

Like Stan Musial, 1948 National League batting champion, Arnold Galiffa, West Point's great all-round athlete who appears on LIFE's cover, comes from Donora, Pa. When Galiffa posed for Photographer Arnold Newman he particularly impressed Newman with his icicle poise. Galiffa's classmates stopped to razz him while Newman was taking pictures, but Galiffa never flickered an eyelash. His classmates should have recalled he had that same poise the first time he came to bat in a West Point baseball game. Result was a home run on the first pitch. For more about Galiffa see pages 95 and 96.

This bedtime story's not for kids!

No dragons or fairy queens in this bedtime story.

It's a strictly-for-grownups story that Mrs. Wood Sanford of Homewood, Illinois, was "driven" to write us after she read a recent Pequot Sheet advertisement.

"I think you deserve to hear about my Pequot crib sheets. In and out of the wash continuously, those six sheets lasted through my daughter's crib years. Then straight through her brother's, too."

And Mrs. Sanford mentions another important point to remember when comparing wearing qualities...the number of sheets in use:

"The fact that I had only 6, and two of them are still fresh and white and whole, makes my bedtime story even better."

Made for Years of Extra Wear

You simply can't beat Pequot high-count, plus-service muslins...for crisp, fresh appearance, for smooth, close-woven softness, for year-in, year-out wear that makes them a real value. Pequot plus-service muslins...America's most popular sheets...are made to outwear any other sheet you can buy at any price.

Who helped the Guthries get their gas?

Who'd have ever thought they would get gas 'way out on the Guthrie place? Somebody should count the steps that's going to save Mrs. Guthrie.

The only ones who may regret this new improvement are the kids, since it probably means a new hot water heater—and more baths!

But how was the Guthrie family provided with this convenience? The gas company was ready to furnish service but needed money to buy necessary equipment. The Prudential lent the company $250,000 to buy "bottled gas" cylinders. Now there are more than 25,000 farm and suburban families in Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky as delighted as the Guthries are with their gas.

This is only one of many loans to smaller businesses The Prudential is making all the time all over the country. Chances are good The Prudential is sending dollars back to your community . . . helping to make life better for more families . . . keeping factories going . . . making new jobs.

When The Prudential invests money it is holding to guarantee the future of its policyholders, it helps to make the present happier and more productive for all of us.

IRISH BECOME A FREE NATION

For 33 years the Gaelic battle cry "An Poblacht Abú!" ("Up the Republic!") had risen from Irish lips. Last week as Easter came, the republic was up at last. The white, orange and green tricolor floated in triumph over the General Post Office in Dublin (left) where Irish patriots first raised it during the abortive Easter Monday rebellion of 1916. The independent Republic of Ireland (pop. 3 million) now joined the family of nations.

Independence followed 795 years of full or partial British rule and long struggle against it. Although the 1916 revolt was put down, it led to the Irish Free State with dominion status in 1922. After Eamon de Valera came to power in 1932, the Free State abolished the oath of allegiance to the United Kingdom. Last December the parliament finally cut the last governmental ties with Britain. The proclamation of this act was delayed until Easter so it might serve as a tribute to the heroes of the rebellion.

There were formal observances in all 26 counties of the republic. In the six northern counties of Ulster, whose government remains loyal to the Crown, nationalist orators eulogized the heroes of rebellion while police watched them closely. Many Irishmen will not be satisfied unless and until the republic includes Ulster, and the old cry for a national language has been renewed with independence (below). To most, however, the cannon firing proclaiming the republic was the sweetest music since the harp was heard through Tara's halls.

THE KING'S ENGLISH is used to demand its abandonment in favor of ancient Gaelic, which few Irish use.

DUBLIN CELEBRATES IN STREETS, CHURCHES AND PUBS

In Dublin, the capital and cradle of the freedom movement the Irish celebrated noisily. O'Connell Street, which was spotted with rebel blood on Easter Monday 33 years ago when Patrick Pearse and his compatriots launched their revolt against England, was the center of festivity. As midnight of Easter Sunday passed, trumpets blared, 21 guns boomed and 150 riflemen of the Irish army fired a rattling feu de joi to open the day of anniversary and freedom. On O'Connell Bridge over the Liffey (left) a crowd cheered and sang When Irish Eyes Are Smiling—along with a fresh number, Buttons and Bows. But non-Irish spectators who had come expecting to see joyful riots and mayhem were surprised at the restraint and the frequently prayerful celebration which they actually saw (below). From Rome, Pope Pius sent his apostolic blessing to the heavily Catholic new nation, and the heads of governments everywhere cabled felicitations. George VI, who is King of Great Britain but no longer of Ireland, proffered his "sincere good wishes."

ON EASTER MONDAY President O'Kelly (height: 5'3") and Mrs. O'Kelly (5'10½") attend celebration Mass.

AT MOMENT OF VICTORY THE IRISH STILL ARGUE

The man who perhaps did most to make Ireland free was only a sullen spectator at the celebration. Unseated as premier in 1948 when John Costello was elected, Eamon de Valera now broods on an opposition bench in the famed Dáil (opposite). His politician's humor seemed to suffer when Costello succeeded in cutting the final links with England. Old "Dev" denounced the celebration as a "sham" (because Ireland is still partitioned) and called on his followers to boycott it. He did not join President O'Kelly (above) in hailing the new republic but instead publicly and pointedly prayed for the dead heroes of the 1916 Rebellion (below). This moved one Irish barman to remark sourly, "Sure, it's all politics. Costello and his crowd have wiped Dev's eye, and now Dev is trying to get his own back on them."

ON EASTER SUNDAY Eamon de Valera kneels at historic Arbour Hill cemetery to pray for Rebellion martyrs.

THE IRISH DAIL, sketched by Osbert Lancaster, is presided over by Speaker Frank Fahy (on the dais). At right are government benches, with Premier John Costello of the Fine Gael party reading a speech. Pumpkin-cheeked Deputy Prime Minister William Norton is next to Costello, and next to him is General Richard Mulcahy, Minister of Education. At extreme left on the opposition bench hawk-faced Eamon de Valera listens skeptically, as do two of his Fianna Fáil followers, Sean MacEntee and Sean Lemass, both former officials in Dev's government.

HEALTH BY COMPULSION

THE PRESIDENT PROPOSES MUCH THAT IS GOOD, BUT THERE ARE BETTER WAYS TO ACHIEVE HIS GOALS

President Truman's health message, the subject of rumors and conjectures throughout the winter, is now before Congress. Although it may not produce legislative action this year, it is one of the more momentous documents of our time. Before the 1950 elections come around it will undoubtedly involve both parties in bitter controversy. And the ultimate response of the American people to its main feature will do more to shape the nature of our domestic future than anything else now on the legislative horizon.

The heart of the message is the President's request that Congress base a national health program upon compulsory medical insurance. Since we already have compulsory social security designed to give minimum old-age protection, this request may not seem to be a departure from U.S. tradition. Actually it marks a radical departure. For, where compulsory social security deals with the problem of establishing minimum safeguards, the Truman compulsory health insurance demand has nothing whatever to do with either a minimum or a floor. Following the line that is pursued in The Nation's Health, a Report to the President, by Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing, Mr. Truman has suggested a program to ensure all medical services for all the people, even down (or up) to the point of removing a wart from the finger of a Rockefeller or giving hay fever injections to a Morgan partner. As contrasted with the "floor" philosophy of the New Deal, the Truman-Ewing proposal introduces a "tent" philosophy: get everybody under cover for everything.

To pay for compulsory medical insurance the Administration suggests a withholding tax on payrolls, with employer contributions to match. The compulsory insurance feature would involve several billions, but in addition to this the President has asked additional federal subsidies for constructing hospitals, federal aid for expansion of medical schools and increased federal grants to help states and localities to control disease at its source and to promote child health and maternity services. The whole proposal, if enacted into law, would come to at least five or six billion a year, maybe more.

Where Is the Demand?

LIFE is unqualifiedly for many of the things which Mr. Truman has requested in his message. We are for federal subsidies for new (or improved) hospitals. We are for federal underwriting of medical research and education wherever private endowments fail to do a necessary job. We are for federal grants to entice doctors and nurses to the back country where sickness now goes unattended. We are for federal aid to states and localities where subsidies are needed to take care of people who lack the means to pay for care. We are for a constant expansion of the present Public Health Service's efforts to eradicate the environmental causes of disease.

But LIFE refuses to believe that most U.S. citizens are unable to look after themselves. What of voluntary group insurance? The President, following Oscar Ewing, says that voluntary medical insurance is already straining at its natural limits. Some 52 million U.S. citizens have entered into Blue Cross or other prepaid hospitalization plans (which admittedly take care of only a small portion of medical costs). Surely if 52 million people have sought out voluntary insurance with virtually no urging from any source, 80 million or 100 million might seek it under effective stimulus. Although the American Medical Association has belatedly got behind voluntary insurance programs, it has been deplorably remiss and can now do a real service if it will.

Is there a popular demand for compulsory insurance as against voluntary insurance? Even Mr. Ewing in his report does not assert that there

EWING'S AIMS

"A satisfactory system of health insurance should provide:

1. "That everyone should have access to adequate health and medical services.
2. "That everyone should have the kind of services, and all the services, he needs to promote better health.
3. "That everyone should be able to obtain these without regard for the level of his personal income."

is. The idea has been kicking around Congress for some years in the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, but it has taken Mr. Ewing's pressure on the President really to put steam behind it. Some doctors are for it, but many more fear that compulsory methods would result in "assembly line" medicine, with a consequent decline in U.S. medical standards.

Mr. Truman and his health-mate, Mr. Ewing, signally fail to prove that compulsory medical insurance is a crying need in the U.S. To establish the necessity for compulsion the Ewing report leans heavily on income-bracket figures which are probably incontestable. But there are no allowances for the infinite variations of circumstance which determine the human truth behind statistics. Half of all U.S. families, those with incomes of $3,000 or less, says Mr. Ewing, "find it hard, if not impossible, to pay for even routine medical care." The 30% of American families with incomes between $3,000 and $5,000 "would have to make great sacrifices or go into debt to meet the costs of a severe or chronic illness." The upshot of these figures is the contention that only 20% of the U.S. population can afford the medicine it needs.

On the face of it this deduction does not make sense. For even on Mr. Ewing's own showing U.S. health is constantly improving. The average life expectancy of the U.S. citizen has been advanced by 20 years within a couple of generations. American medicine has ended yellow fever, greatly reduced malaria, practically wiped out smallpox, stopped typhoid and diphtheria epidemics. Tuberculosis is no longer the "great white plague," and antibiotics have cut down children's diseases. U.S. citizens have endowed scores of hospitals, created the best medical schools in the world and contributed millions to cancer and polio drives. The big killers of today are heart disease and cancer—in large measure diseases of old age.

Everyone shares these benefits, even those who are on unemployment relief. But beyond this U.S. medicine takes care of many more people than Mr. Ewing would admit. Mr. Ewing implies that 70 million Americans—half the population—exist in some sort of medical darkness. This does not check with the fact that hundreds of U.S. doctors grade their charges in accordance with an "ability to pay" scale, that interns provide a host of services at little cost, that practically every physician contributes a portion of his time to hardship cases. It does not check with the free clinics in our large cities, or with John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers health fund, or with the medical insurance policies which more and more corporations have been writing for their employees.

Again, Mr. Ewing uses his income-bracket statistics without regard to age or regional and economic shadings. For example, some rural areas lack doctors because the people can't pay for them; other rural areas have few doctors because they just don't have much illness. In short, while it is undoubtedly true that millions of people in the U.S. do not have the means for or access to minimal necessary medical care, Mr. Ewing has not shown that compulsory insurance is what they require.

The State and Moral Power

U.S. health is probably not so good as the A.M.A.'s Dr. Fishbein says it is. But it is good enough in comparison to that of the British, French, Germans, Danes, Dutch and New Zealanders to establish a reasonable presumption that voluntary methods work as well or better than compulsion of one sort or another by the state. This does not mean that some 30 million Americans who can't afford a doctor should be left to suffer in silence. Public hospital services, free or partly free, are an established part of the American scene, and no stigma of "charity" attaches to them. Existing "out patient" services can be extended. The formulas proposed by Senators Robert Taft and Lister Hill, Republican and New Deal Democrat respectively, are good ones and in line with what LIFE supports: let voluntary methods be pushed to their natural limits and let the government pay only for the rest.

As for the economic impact of the Truman proposal, it can hardly be as painless as the President suggests. It would require a 3% tax on payrolls to finance his scheme. Added to the 2% now levied for social security, this means a 5% fixed charge on the economy. Just how many levies of this nature can an economic system stand without losing the margin that is necessary for healthy growth?

It is not the money, however, nor any threat of "socialization," that in the last analysis bothers LIFE. What worries us is the loss of moral power that must come when a people turns more and more to compulsion to solve its problems. Left to their own devices, the U.S. people have shown both ingenuity and ability in meeting their needs through voluntary action. Without state compulsion they have created the best medicine in the world. What is more, they have demonstrated that American capitalism can shape the social instruments necessary to a modern society without relinquishing the freedoms and responsibilities that make it strong.

MESSRS. TRUMAN AND EWING VS. THE A.M.A.

NEEDLESS DEATHS

"TO PROMOTE BETTER HEALTH"

The recurring theme and repeatedly declared objective of the Truman-Ewing program is "to promote better health." The arguments in Oscar Ewing's report rest upon a set of "facts" (charts, left) which the American Medical Association counters with wholly different "facts" (right). Mr. Ewing's dearest assertion—the keystone of his argument—is that 325,000 preventable deaths occur annually in the U.S. He says, "It is, of course, impossible to attain any precise estimate," then hammers home the "precise estimate" six times. Another Ewing estimate is that poor health, disability, etc. cost the U.S. a round $27 billion every year—a toll which by comparison makes his calculation of $4 billion annually "for better health" seem attractively small.

THE U.S. IS HEALTHY

TOO FEW DOCTORS

"MR. EWING'S JAIL"

All hands agree that the U.S. needs a lot more doctors, and that at best it can't get them nearly fast enough. With U.S. subsidies Oscar Ewing thinks his goal of 227,000 by 1960 is "feasible" but recognizes that even then there will be a huge gap. On this and other points the fundamental question is whether compulsory insurance and inclusive federal responsibility for individual welfare are necessary to attain agreed aims. U.S. Senator H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey recently put the A.M.A. case: "When I hear Mr. Ewing . . . I think of a man who lives in a fine big house with a leaky roof. The man says, 'This is horrible . . . We must tear down the house and go build a wonderful new jail and live in the jail instead.' . . . I have no enthusiasm at all for Mr. Ewing's jail."

IT HAS 199,745 DOCTORS

MORE BEDS NEEDED

"IF WE HAD AN OPERATION . . ."

LIFE tested some of the arguments and counter-arguments in Mr. Truman's Missouri. Doctors of all opinions agreed that Missourians in the $2,500-$3,500 income bracket can't afford and don't get "adequate medical care." But behind this generalization were such variants as the fact that often a man making $1,000 a year gets more service, free and otherwise, than another making $6,000. George E. Koonce, a St. Louis bookkeeper who earns $3,200 a year, was asked whether he and his family do without needed care because they can't afford it. He said, "No. My wife gets to the doctor at least once a year. So do I and so does the youngster. But if we suddenly had to have an operation costing, say, $300, we'd really be in a hole. I guess I'd have to borrow." Mr. Truman was talking at George Koonce last week.

STRONG MAN'S VICTORY

Dissension in ranks of Montgomery Ward is quelled by Sewell Avery

To Sewell Lee Avery, crusty old Montgomery Ward board chairman who once managed to look confident even when carried out of his office by the U.S. Army (left), last week's problem was a piddling one. The news had been bruited about that his dictatorial leadership of the mail-order house would be disputed at the stockholders' meeting and that he might even be put out of his office again, this time by his stockholders. The most publicized complaint had been that the president and nine vice presidents had left in 11 months, bringing executive departures to more than 40 in the last few years.

But at the meeting last week Avery was nominated in 45 seconds. Only two people questioned him about the resignations; one also questioning his policy of penny-pinching while Ward's chief rival Sears, Roebuck was expanding its business and pulling further ahead of Ward's profitwise. Avery replied that the resignations resulted from a conspiracy that the company was well rid of and implied that Montgomery Ward, unlike Sears, was ready for a depression if it should come. Was there anything else? There was not. Avery was re-elected. It was as easy as that.

Alongside Avery sat eight new vice presidents. "These men ... appear to have ... the character and principle we need," said Avery. "Of course," he added softly. "I can't see into the future. ..."

AMID THE POSTERS THAT HELPED WIN THEM THE ELECTION, F.E. WORKERS CELEBRATE BY CARRYING OAKES ABOUT ON THEIR SHOULDERS AFTER RETURNS COME IN

PARTY-LINER'S VICTORY

Dissension in ranks of C.I.O. is dramatized by noisy U.A.W.—F.E. election

Grant Wilson Oakes was not so confident as Sewell Avery. The party-line president of the C.I.O.'s Farm Equipment Workers had good reason to worry. In a drive to wipe out its Reds and Red-controlled unions, the national C.I.O.'s executive board had directed the F.E. to merge with Walter Reuther's United Auto Workers. The F.E. had flatly refused. Now the U.A.W. was putting on a smashing campaign to capture F.E. members through the ballot box. The big battle came when the U.A.W. tried last week to win a local election at International Harvester's McCormick Works in Chicago, where F.E. has its biggest local. Pickets paraded, the air was filled with propaganda (right), even motor boats cruised up the Chicago River to harangue lunching workers. F.E. members, said the U.A.W., should toss out "Oakes and his little red acorns." The F.E. countercharged that the U.A.W. was using "goons, ginks and company lunks." The week before the auto workers had won an election at two Allis Chalmers plants in Springfield, Ill. The U.A.W. proclaimed, "We've got the Communists on the run."

On election day the F.E. really put on the steam. Members drove as far as 28 miles just to bring one voter to the polls. The result: F.E. got 2,474 votes, U.A.W. 2,059. Like Avery, Oakes had won. But unlike Avery, Oakes so far had won only one battle, and U.A.W.'s Reuther was still a formidable opponent.

As they have done for centuries, Madrid's devout Catholics took over the streets on Good Friday to do penance for their sins and share in the suffering of the crucified Christ. All day long they surged through avenues closed to automotive traffic (opposite page), visiting one church after another to kneel and pray before a variety of religious images. In the afternoon small processions appeared, representing episodes of Christ's Passion. Such displays, however, were only a preliminary to the great "parade of silence" (below), which wound

AIR FORCE KNOCKS OUT NAVY'S SUPER CARRIER

After years of wrangling and just six days of construction, the huge U.S.S. "United States" is abandoned

In a graving dock at Newport News, Va., with quiet and almost furtive ceremony, the keel of the 65,000-ton aircraft carrier United States was laid on April 18. It was not much of an operation—merely the lowering of a few slabs of metal into an empty valley of steel and timbers. Five days later Secretary of Defense Johnson issued an order halting work on the ship. The long-standing feud between Air Force and Navy had come to a climax and, whether temporarily or permanently, the Air Force had won.

Since 1945 the feud has centered around this question: in the next war who will deliver the atomic bomb, and how? The Air Force felt that it alone should have the bomb and that land-based bombers should deliver it. The Navy believed that it, too, should have the bomb, and that in certain circumstances it should be delivered by carrier planes. Each went ahead with its own plans. The Air Force developed the B-36 (opposite page), which has a radius of 5,000 miles. The Navy went to work on the United States, a huge carrier half again as large as any flat-top the U.S. ever built. Each attacked the other's project and the arguments were many and bitter.

For the carrier:

- 1) It could be well protected by its own weapons plus those of a host of supporting ships.
- 2) It is admittedly expensive, but no more so than 35 B-36 bombers, which could conceivably be lost in one disastrous mission.
- 3) It has many uses other than strategic bombing, such as supplying fighter cover for B-36 bombers.
- 4) Abandoning plans for the super carrier means abandoning progress in naval aviation.

Against the carrier:

- 1) It is highly vulnerable.
- 2) The carrier alone is extremely expensive (Navy estimates $189 million; others up to $500 million) and is fantastically so when the cost of necessary vessels—other carriers, cruisers, destroyers and submarines—is added.
- 3) It is an unwarranted interference in strategic bombing, sole province of the Air Force.
- 4) Carriers are effective only against surface ships and islands, targets which Russia does not afford.

Arguments also raged around the B-36. The Air Force contended that at 40,000 feet the plane is very difficult for jet fighters to intercept and has proven itself capable of carrying a five-ton bomb load 5,000 miles and returning. The Navy charged that the Air Force has not tested the B-36 against top-notch fighters such as its own XF7U-1, which may be able to knock it down, and that developments in rocket planes and in the antiaircraft field (guided missiles) may soon make the B-36 worthless.

For a long time the fight between the services was waged on even terms. The battle continued even after the meetings last year of the Joint Chiefs of Staff at Key West and Newport, where a compromise was supposedly reached. Gradually the Air Force seized the field of strategic bombing as its sole province. This was a heavy blow to proponents of the super carrier. As time wore on, it proved mortal. The Air Force won its case before Secretary Johnson and persuaded Congress as well. Said Chairman Clarence Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee, "We must hit within one week after the war starts and it can be done only by land-based planes such as we now have." Thus last week, after six days of life, the U.S.S. United States expired in its cradle.

SWINGING ALONG A RAMPART HAND IN HAND, INGRID BERGMAN AND DIRECTOR ROBERTO ROSSELLINI HAPPILY VIEW A RUINED CASTLE ON STROMBOLI ISLAND

STROMBOLIAN IDYL

Ingrid holds hands with her director while husband flies to Italy

For the past three years Italian Movie Director Roberto Rossellini has been wowing U. S. movie fans with such movies as Open City, Shoeshine and Paisan. His movies also wowed Hollywood Actress Ingrid Bergman to the extent that she wrote him a fan letter last year saying, "If you ever need an actress with a Swedish accent, just call on me." Rossellini did, and in March, Bergman went to Italy's Stromboli Island to make a picture for him.

By last week the columnists were gossiping that Miss Bergman had been wowed not only by Rossellini the director but also by Rossellini the man. Living conditions on Stromboli were crowded, the star and her director living in a four-room cottage with her secretary and his sister. But, the rumors said, Bergman and Rossellini were enjoying their Italian idyl so much that she was considering a divorce from her husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom, and he was flying to the island to have a talk with her. So far no confirmation had come to the mainland, but the picture above had, and it showed that the star and her director looked happy indeed.

HERESY IS CHARGED TO CHURCH LEADERS

But Boston protest is squelched

In the past the word heretic has been applied by the Church to members who strayed from the path of approved, official doctrine. Last week in Boston it was being applied in reverse by a small group of Roman Catholics who charged the local hierarchy itself with heresy.

Four Catholic lay teachers, two of them converts (below), had protested that their superiors at Boston College were heretical in their interpretation of Catholic doctrine. They contended that their superiors were weakening the Catholic faith by saying it was no longer necessary for a person to belong to the Catholic Church to merit salvation. Boston College countered by firing all four for promoting "intolerance" and "bigotry."

Into the fight, on the teachers' side, jumped the Rev. Leonard Feeney, S.J. (the Jesuit order), author of books of popularized theology and director of Boston's St. Benedict's Center, a small Catholic school. Feeney sometimes did imitations of Katharine Hepburn in public for the laughs. But last week his problem was no joking matter. He had already been stripped of his priestly prerogatives for earlier acts of insubordination. For supporting the dissident teachers, Boston's Archbishop Richard Cushing ordered him to close his Center. Feeney did so, then transferred his classes to the Center School—actually the same room he had used before—and continued (right) to teach.

The argument, meanwhile, was almost over. The latest American catechism, out last week, reaffirmed the views of the teachers' superiors. There was no real salvation outside the Catholic Church, it said, but Protestants who practiced faith and charity might be said to deserve it since their actions proved it was only excusable ignorance that kept them from joining it. Feeney and his friends hoped that Pope Pius would come to their support. But unofficial word from the Vatican made it clear that Heaven was not considered to be exclusively Catholic, and it appeared that Father Feeney and the four teachers were the real heretics.

FATHER FEENEY continues to teach a large and faithful group of young Catholic followers. Said he: "I don't care what happens to me after this. The only one who can clarify our faith and preserve it for posterity is the Holy Father. Christianity is not a lot of vague ideas. You cannot preach Catholicism without enthusiasm.

MRS. PITCAIRN (RIGHT) WATCHES HUSBAND AT THE HELM IN NEW YORK

TORN SAIL LIES ON DECK BESIDE RAIL WHERE MRS. PITCAIRN WENT OVER

FOUR DAYS AFTER HIS WIFE'S DEATH PITCAIRN STILL STARES OUT AT SEA

TRAGEDY AT SEA

To the seven amateur sailors who hired the 70-foot schooner Seaflower and her skipper, it started out as a pleasant cruise from New York to Bermuda. But three days out, in the twisting crosscurrents of the Gulf Stream, the storm hit. The crew fought seasickness and furling sail at the same time. Near midnight Mrs. Virginia Pitcairn lost her footing and lurched over the side. She immediately disappeared in the boiling Atlantic. The Seaflower searched back and forth in vain. It was not until six days later that the schooner, wallowing helplessly in mid-Atlantic, was spotted by a passing freighter which summoned the Coast Guard to tow the drenched, weary survivors safely into port.

1. Versatile Vin, ventriloquist, was sprightly, sly, and cheery. His dummy, known as "Gloomy Gus," was woeful, wan, and weary. "Cheer up," cried Vin, "in Pittsburgh, we stay where staying's best: At Statler's Hotel William Penn, you really are a guest!"

2. "To say that Statler food is GREAT," cried Vin, "is no distortion. It's cooked by extra skillful chefs, and served in generous portion. I'm sure that meals as good as this, my lad, will please your tummy." "You talk," said Gloomy Gus, "I eat—so which one is the dummy?"

3. "To brighten up your gloom," said Vin, "just try the Statler tub. Relax in floods of water hot—use lots of soap to scrub, And note the stacks of snowy towels, so white there's nothing whiter." "At least," admitted Gloomy Gus, "it's got me looking brighter!"

4. "You'll love the Statler bed," said Vin, "you gloomy piece of lumber. Eight hundred built-in springs and more, bring super-restful slumber. There'll be no need, my wooden friend, to count your wooden sheep." But "Gloomy" didn't answer, he was smiling in his sleep!

5. Next morning they departed, Happy Vin and Grinning Gus. "We love the William Penn," they sang, "it really pleases us. Your heart-of-town location, too, we think is mighty swell. In Pittsburgh, you're no 'dummy' when you stay at this hotel!"

FEVRE (RIGHT) AND MERINDOL HAVE AT EACH OTHER IN SENART FOREST

A BONAPARTIST'S HONOR

Because the ancestors of Parisian Armand Fèvre fought with Napoleon, Fèvre is of the opinion that those days—and the man who made them—had been best (LIFE, April 18). He not only has adopted the dress and manners of his idol, but he has martial spirit as well. Fèvre's appearance caused French Journalist Pierre Merindol to write an article calling Fèvre a "dehydrated personage." Incensed, Fèvre sought out the journalist, challenged him in the manner of the old days. The duel (above), proved that Fèvre was indeed the better swordsman. But young Merindol, his hand lightly slashed (right) proved a gallant loser, whereupon everyone retired to a Left Bank cafe for a bottle of wine.

THE SOVIET MINISTRY OF MEAT AND DAIRY INDUSTRIES USES A SMILING WAITRESS TO ADVERTISE ICE CREAM

ADVERTISING, RUSSIAN STYLE

Soviets use capitalistic campaign to help their controlled economy

The manifestations of capitalism pictured on these pages were not paid for by free enterprise. But they do offer proof that the law of supply and demand is working even in Russia. They are advertisements prepared by the Soviet government for the magazine Ogonyok and are aimed at Ogonyok's big city circulation. Now that civilian production has finally begun to catch up with the demand that existed during the Five Year Plans and the war, the government has sometimes found itself with too much mustard or skin cream or cheese. The answer: advertise them. The ad campaign is aimed mostly at the city people and concentrates on such items as foods, cigarets and insurance that they can afford, with little emphasis on expensive items like refrigerators and motor boats. Despite the similarity to some U.S. techniques, Russian advertising has one advancement still to perfect. But that must wait until the Soviets can "prove" that a Russian invented the singing commercial.

"AT A GIFTS SHOP," says Russian caption. Shoppers are shown taking advantage of more civilian goods.

APPEAL TO THE SECURITY-MINDED: SAVINGS ACCOUNTS AND LIFE INSURANCE

While the Russians are buying ice cream and chicken fat, the government wants to be sure that they will also put aside some of their money for a snowy day. So ads urge them to start savings accounts (left). Other recommended savings plans are forms of insurance. To prove the point the government runs an advertisement (right) that shows a happy Russian mother and child who are now protected because father took out life insurance.

APPEAL TO SMOKERS AND DRINKERS: "AROMATIC" CIGARETS AND "ZHIGULI BEER"

The Ministry of Gustatory Industries is in charge of such products as cigarettes and beer. Accordingly the ministry advertises (left) cigarettes made both of strong tobacco and tobacco that is "aromatic and mild." "Ask for them," says a familiar slogan, "in all stores and at newspaper stands." In another ad (right) the Central Beer Trust, a division of the ministry, plugs "Zhiguli Beer," which is excellent with rak, a Russian crawfish.

APPEAL TO VANITY: LOTION FOR "VELVETY SKIN," NEW CLOTHES FOR SUMMER

The Central Perfumery Trust is, for some reason, also a division of the Ministry of Gustatory Industries. Its ad (left) points out that "Vita" lotion contains not only lanolin but also vitamins A and D. It "eliminates wrinkles." For further beautification the Moscow Lenin department store announces (right) it has received "a large assortment of high-grade goods for the coming summer season . . . shoes, hats . . . orders taken for overcoats."

TUBERCULOSIS VACCINE

U.S. doctors try out immunization drug after years of controversy

Snubbed by U.S. doctors for years, the only vaccine known to immunize against tuberculosis has now been accepted for a large-scale tryout in this country. The vaccine, called BCG, is already being given to test groups in eight states. In one group of 3,000 American Indians the tuberculosis mortality rate among those vaccinated was nine times lower than among the unvaccinated.

Discovered in 1908 by two French scientists, the drug is made by growing the germs of cow tuberculosis in a medium which weakens the organisms' virulence. During early tests the vaccine received a bad name when 75 German children died after being injected. These deaths were actually caused by a technician's mistake. But medical men continued to hold BCG suspect until years of tests proved that the vaccine was not only harmless but built up a high degree of immunity in persons not already infected. In Europe some 15 million children are being vaccinated. In the U.S. mass immunization may be years away, but at least BCG has won the support of many tuberculosis experts.

VACCINATOR has 40 prongs which puncture a drug-soaked paper, deposit vaccine in holes in patient's skin.

LARGE-SCALE TESTS ARE GIVEN

Slower to accept BCG than their European colleagues, U.S. doctors think the vaccine should be tested over a much longer period before being made commercially available. In the State of New York it is being given to hospital personnel who regularly are exposed to tuberculosis, and to young children in selected areas. In Georgia an entire community of 75,000 persons has been selected for mass immunization. But doctors point out that the vaccine should not be given to persons who react positively to tuberculin tests; they are already infected, so BCG will not help them. Doctors also stress that the vaccine is no cure; it will not be effective on the estimated half million persons who have active tuberculosis. For these, X-ray diagnosis and the usual treatment of isolation, rest, diet and medicines must still be employed.

IN TEXAS ALMOST EVERYBODY PAINTS BLUEBONNETS

When it's bluebonnet time in Texas and the sweeping fields around Austin, Gonzales and San Antonio turn into waving acres of delicate bluish purple, the sight is heady enough to make a Texan forget the Alamo. Texans react to it heartily. They have made the bluebonnet their official state flower and named restaurants, beer joints, stores and a diaper service after it. They write songs and poems and books about it and paint innumerable pictures of it. In Texas no one worth his boots would be without a bluebonnet picture in his living room, and artists are judged not so much by their imagination as by the way they paint bluebonnets.

This April the bluebonnet bloom was earlier than ever. Texans away from home thought wistfully of it and Texans on the spot grabbed easels and hurried out to paint pictures of their favorite flower. Some of them (below) went with art classes, some daubed for fun and some made a good living out of it. All hoped they might someday become as famous as Julian Onderdonk (1882-1922), founder of the bluebonnet school, who painted bluebonnets with such a realistic eye that Texans would never let him paint much of anything else.

REPLACEMENT FOR RITA?

A LIVELY, FRECKLED YOUNG LADY FROM FRANCE MAKES HER BID FOR HAYWORTH'S VACANT THRONE IN HOLLYWOOD

Ever since Rita Hayworth ran off to marry an Indian prince, there has been a throne vacant in Hollywood: the throne of the Love Goddess. Among the aging prima donnas and the pert young things that have cluttered up most recent pictures, you will search in vain for one of those fabulous, full-bodied, spicy, electric-eyed creatures who were once the stock in trade of the movie business, who drove men to madness and women to envy in all countries, classes, creeds and conditions.

Every Hollywood studio has its claimant to Rita's throne. The lively young lady coming out of the swimming pool above is being put forward by Hal Wallis, who produces pictures for Paramount. She is Corinne Calvet (pronounced Cal-vay), a 23-year-old French brunette who claims to be a descendant of one of Louis XV's paramours but does not make any claim to being a great actress. She is described by her press agents—however, as an accomplished interior decorator. She came to Hollywood from France two whole years ago (LIFE, May 26, 1947) but, aside from getting badly hurt in an automobile accident and getting married to a handsome young actor named John Bromfield, nothing much happened to Corinne. Then she got a chance at appearing in a picture called Rope of Sand. The leading feminine role in this film is that of a French trollop living in Cape-town who rams three men connected with the diamond business (right). California preview audiences who have had a look at the scene in which she flings her charms in the face of Diamond Merchant Claude Rains (next page) are inclined to think that Mr. Wallis has found what he was after.

GEORGES BRAQUE works in a large, spic and span studio in the outskirts of Paris. His easel is thickly encrusted with many years' accumulation of dried paint.

G Braque

GREAT FRENCH INNOVATOR HAS EVOLVED A SERENE MODERN ART OF HIS OWN

THE Frenchman at left, Georges Braque, is a kindly, contemplative and eminently conventional man. But he is credited with launching two of the most revolutionary developments in the history of art. With Picasso he devised the geometric approach to painting that has come to be called cubism. Alone, he innovated the technique of collage—creating designs by pasting bits of materials on paper or canvas. Moreover, he has turned out hundreds of serenely abstract still-life paintings which have established him as one of the gréatest living artists. The demand for his work has been tremendous. He has sold some 600 paintings to museums and private collections all over the world, with the result that he is now a very wealthy man.

For years Braque's reputation has been somewhat obscured in this country by the fame of his sensational contemporary, Picasso. This spring, however, the U.S. is seeing for the first time an exhibit of Braque's life work, revealing the full sweep of his power and originality. First seen at Cleveland's Museum of Art, the show is now on view at the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

Braque is a 6-foot, massively built man with the thick strong hands of an artisan. Born in 1882, the son of a house painter he was trained in the family profession but quit it for art when he was 20. French painting was then a weary form of impressionism, ruled by second-rate followers of Degas, Monet and Renoir. But in Paris, seat of many an art rebellion, a new one was beginning to seethe, led by a group of painters called fauves (wild beasts) because of their bold lines and shocking colors. Braque fell under the spell of the fauves and, for a beginner, was quite successful. The first time he exhibited his fauvist work at a Paris show in 1907, he sold all of the pictures he entered.

Braque became bored with fauvism and took up with a young firebrand named Pablo Picasso. Their meeting turned out to be one of the most important of the century. Picasso showed Braque a painting he had done portraying five nude women in an angular, distorted way that suggested geometric shapes. Braque was horrified and complained that Picasso was asking mankind to "eat rope and drink gasoline." But he changed his mind, realizing that Picasso's ideas fell in with his own. Not long after, he painted an extremely geometric picture, the first really "cubist" painting the world had ever seen. This irked Picasso, who considered Braque's picture an unethical scoop. Eventually the two men settled their differences and collaborated so closely on developing cubism that their styles were indistinguishable (p. 82).

A gay circle of friends and followers formed around Braque and Picasso. They went to circuses, listened to Chinese music and played instruments ranging from the accordion to weird African drums. They collected African sculpture, odd glasses and nails. Braque, an impressive and swarthy figure, swore lustily and wore his blue work clothes with a careless swagger. He loved to box and earned a formidable reputation in brawls at the Café de l'Ermitage, a cubist haunt in Montmartre. Some of his liveliest evenings were spent in the home of a German named Goetz who served porridge pots full of champagne. Leaving one party chez Goetz, Braque felt so elated he slid down the banister and crashed feet first through the door of the apartment below.

For Braque, the carefree cubist days in Montmartre ended with World War I. He served with distinction as a lieutenant in the army and then settled down with his wife to a suburban life on the Rue du Douanier in the outskirts of Paris. He built a red brick house which resembles the home of a modestly well-to-do lawyer. Quietly, steadily, with none of the virtuoso tantrums that characterize some modern artists, he evolved the style that has made him rich and famous.

YOUNG CUBIST Braque, 29, worked in this Montmartre studio surrounded by the articles which still fill his paintings: violin, flowers, clay pipes, water cans.

AT 4 Braque, wearing a dress, rode a combination hobbyhorse and tricycle.

AT 16 he played flute as well as accordion and guitar and sang beautifully.

AT 18 he had become a burly and proficient devotee of the sport of la boxe.

AT 33 Soldier Braque was wounded, won Croix de Guerre, Legion of Honor.

EARLY DRAWING of Braque's mother (1904) reveals influence of Toulouse-Lautrec. Woman behind was family maid whom Braque disliked and made ugly.

FIRST CUBIST PAINTING (right), which Braque did in L'Estaque, was inspired by work of Cézanne, who also painted view of L'Estaque in detail (left).

CUBIST STYLES of Braque (left) and Picasso (right) were identical in 1911. Working in same village, Braque portrayed a guitarist; Picasso, an accordionist.

STILL LIFE, 1908, shows an early attempt at abstraction, was first one done from his imagination.

HIS STYLE GREW FROM REALISM AND CUBISM

THE art of Georges Braque is an unusual combination of the rarefied theories of cubism and the rather homely principles of house painting. House painters in Braque's day were called upon to make cheap walls look like marble, gilt and richly grained rare woods. This technique fascinated Braque and led him to invent collage (below) in which he contrasted surface textures merely by pasting things on paper or canvas. Textures continued to preoccupy Braque throughout his postcubist career, as the paintings on the next pages show. Cubism taught him a painting must not be looked at as a copy of life but as an expression of it and a pleasing pattern of planes, lines and colors.

In his early experiments with cubism Braque was inspired by the great 19th Century artist Paul Cézanne, who painted objects (far left, center) with a minimum of detail to emphasize their basic structure. His style suggested to Braque the possibility of reducing structure to even simpler forms and of discovering behind the outer covering of nature an amazing new world of shapes. Braque's first attempt (left, center) retained a touch of reality. But, exploring deeper, he abandoned the rules of perspective and broke forms down so that all their sides could be seen at once on a flat surface. From here Braque went on to even freer arrangements (lower left), separating the planes of objects from each other and moving them around in order to obtain more striking designs.

From all these elements Braque forged his mature paintings (opposite). His beautifully balanced compositions, introducing a spiritual calmness into modern art, express the French love of logical, orderly arrangements. Within his narrow field of still life he has worked with subtle variation and a sensual love of everyday objects. Out of an ordinary guitar, a critic once observed, Braque has created a Madonna.

COLLAGE of newspaper and wallpaper suggests guitar. Technique grew from Braque's experiments with paper sculpture, which he folded into cubist shapes.

PITCHER AND BASKET OF FRUIT was done in 1925 after Braque abandoned cubism for a more realistic style. He achieved gravelly texture by adding sand

SUGAR BOWL WITH FRUIT, painted in 1921, reveals Braque's free-flowing brushwork. He painted fruit in soft colors that characterize his best-known work.

ANEMONES, done in 1925, is study in contrasts. Wavy grain in wood contrasts with vertical stripes in background and curving forms of cup, pitcher and flowers

BRAQUE CONTINUED

STILL LIFE: LE JOUR was painted by Braque in 1929 in a style that shows marked change from early '20s. Household items, Braque's favorite subjects, are portrayed abstractly, distorted and flattened for new, unusual effect. Lettering reflects Braque's early employment as sign painter.

← WOMAN WITH BASKET OF FRUIT, done in 1926, shows one of few human figures Braque has painted. Not interested in portraying a realistic nude, he painted her as another still life, flattening her out so that her body contours became part of a rhythmic, decorative pattern.

← STILL LIFE WITH PINK BACKGROUND, an abstraction dated 1935, was unusual departure for Braque, who had seldom used so much pink. Key to design of picture is the two-dimensional, distorted mandolin, whose shape recurs in the numerous abstract oval designs on the table and is further suggested by shapes of bottle and glass. Braque, who often puts a mandolin in his pictures, is himself a mandolin player.

COMPOTE DISH, BOTTLE AND MANDOLIN, which Braque painted in 1930, clearly reveals his early cubist background. He portrayed several diversely shaped objects, including sausagelike dish and horseshoe-shaped mouth of vase, and joined them all into a unified pattern by superimposing upon them a complicated system of interlocking geometric forms. Grain of marble table shows Braque's interest in textures.

THE SUNFLOWERS, done in 1946, reveals Braque's recent shift to more realistic style. He even included a picture frame as part of his composition.

BRAQUE EVOLVES A NEW REALISM

Today Georges Braque continues to explore the great and fathomless art of painting. Many an artist who has become famous has found it more profitable to be less inquisitive and keep churning out the sure-fire work with which he first made his name. But Braque's evolution has never ceased. Since World War II he has gradually been moving toward a more realistic style, as shown above. What the change means no one can tell now for sure—not even Braque himself. Asked if he was consciously abandoning abstractions, he drew a line suggesting a woman's profile. "Look at this line," he said. "Is it abstract? Is it a profile? Where does abstraction begin? Where does it end? I have never been able to find out what it really is. . . ."

Braque's art is so highly personal that it cannot be pigeonholed into the handy compartments of isms which the art experts love to use. It has roots in classic Greek art, as shown in the drawing at left from his sketchbooks. It has elevated common household objects to a new and remarkable place in the world, where they become parts of an infinitely rich and varied scheme of shapes and colors. To Braque the relationship of objects with their textures is the end-all of painting, no matter how realistically or abstractly it is presented. His philosophy is catching. Thousands of little Braques, fashionable in the art circles of America and Europe, have worn his art threadbare. "I prefer those who exploit me to those who follow me," declares Braque. But the imitators, as always, are left in the dust. Braque, younger than youth itself, moves on—seeking something new.

THE MECHANICS of sun heating are basically simple. Upper fan blows heated air down to the large storage cans of sodium compound from which the lower fan circulates the heat as it is needed.

WORLD'S FIRST SUN-HEATED HOME

A NEW HOUSE IN DOVER, MASS. HAS BEEN COMFORTABLY WARM ALL WINTER WITHOUT A FURNACE

The unconventional building below, resembling a modern house with superimposed chicken coop, may turn out to be historic. It is the world's first year-round home to be heated entirely by the sun. Not to be confused with "solar" houses, this house needs no furnace at all, although it is located in chilly Dover, Mass. Instead it has a large "heat collector," consisting of two separated panes of glass with a black metal panel behind them. This is a heat trap (above); the sun's short heat waves go through the glass and warm the metal to as much as 150°. At this temperature the metal gives off long heat waves that cannot easily go back out through the glass. A fan blows this trapped heat through conduits to big cans filled with a cheap ($10 a ton) sodium compound which has the property of efficiently soaking up and storing heat. When heat is needed, other fans draw the warmed air through the house.

The house was privately built under direction of Dr. Maria Telkes of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and was lived in all winter by a family that reported complete comfort. If further experiments are successful, Dover's odd house could be the beginning of a big reduction in the approximately $3.5 billion the U.S. pays annually for household fuel.

DIFFERENT PRINCIPLE is employed in a solar-heated house M.I.T. built at Cambridge, Mass. A 400-square-foot heat collector warms water which is stored in a 1,200-gallon insulated tank in the attic, and which is calculated to keep the house at 68°. However supplementary heat is occasionally needed.

WILL SUN REPLACE FURNACE?

An acre of the earth's surface each day receives an amount of solar energy equal to that produced by burning 9 tons of coal. The houses shown here are the most successful experiments thus far in utilizing this source of energy. But just how soon sun-heating systems will become widely used is a matter on which competent authorities differ. Four people whose views reflect varying shades of opinion are shown below.

ARCHITECT George Fred Keck, the noted solar-house experimenter, thinks that there is little chance of solar heating replacing conventional systems soon because solar heating has not yet proved to be efficient.

ENGINEER Eugene Avers of Gulf Oil Corporation points out man's fuel resources, according to different estimates, will be used up in from 92 to 100 years, says Telkes method can reduce the national fuel bill 10% in 10 years.

ARCHITECT Carl Koch feels both the M.I.T. and Telkes experiments are very promising but he points out the American trend is toward compact automatic conveniences rather than toward maximum economy.

ARCHITECT William Hamby of Raymond Loewy Associates (p. 110) believes that solar heat will replace all other types within the next 10 years and says that the sodium compound is the only promising solar storage unit.

In West Point's modern history only one man ("Lighthorse" Harry Wilson, '28, who is now a colonel) has done better than that, and he had been an athlete at Penn State before entering the Academy.

Galiffa was also an 11-letter man in high school at Donora, Pa., where his father is the school janitor. A 6 foot 2 inch, 190-pounder, he used to work in a Donora steel mill. At one time he worked an eight-hour shift on four hours of sleep and used his other waking hours to play high-school baseball and run on the track team. "I had to quit the mill," he recalls, "when I passed out running the half mile one afternoon."

A strong 1949 candidate for the Sullivan Award, presented annually to the outstanding amateur athlete in the U.S., Galiffa could be a professional star in any of his three sports. For the moment, however, he has no career in mind but the Army. When he graduates in 1950 he expects to marry his home town girl, who is a Donora telephone operator, and then get into aviation or the infantry.

UNIFORMS for basketball, football, baseball are displayed by Galiffa, who is wearing his fancy dress grays.

FOOTBALL'S GALIFFA speeds around end in spring scrimmage. He carries ball infrequently, usually handing it off from his T-formation quarterback slot.

BASKETBALL'S GALIFFA scores a one-handed field goal against Colgate. For his own amusement he boxes, wrestles, swims, plays squash and tennis.

NEW TV TOWER is a $40,000 spike in Erie's sky. WICU, the only television station in town, is built on a gentle rise of land to give it a range of 40 miles.

SMALL-TOWN TELEVISION

Erie, Pa. likes its lively, brand-new low-cost station

Although a U.S. map of operating television stations still has a somewhat desertlike aspect, with most of the 61 TV oases clustered in heavily populated areas, a brand-new facet of TV's startling growth is just beginning to appear. TV stations are popping up in small communities where TV angels once feared to tread.

One of these is Erie, Pa., most of whose 134,000 people had never seen a television set. Erie's first station, built by an Erie newspaper owner named Edward Lamb and coyly titled WICU, opened early in March. Instantly it stirred up almost as much excitement as the great Mill Creek flood of 1915. Erie-ites flocked by the hundreds to inspect the tiny station, jammed appliance stores where TV wares were displayed alongside stoves and refrigerators and pestered the station manager to get their offspring on the air for amateur night (pp. 104, 105). Some just stood gaping in wonder at sets in store windows (right). One merchant brashly installed a set in his ice-cream parlor and immediately began to complain about the slow customer turnover.

WICU aroused a good deal of excitement outside of Erie too. Within a month of its opening it was already turning up surprises. With a single camera and staff of 12, Erie was getting at least two live local programs on the air six nights a week on a slim monthly budget of $10,800 (average 1948 monthly operating cost of most TV stations: about $45,000). More remarkably, it came close to breaking even the first month and expects to show a profit by June 1. So far WICU's product, although sometimes appearing ragged to big-city eyes, pleases Erie set owners. By the time they demand something better, thinks Station Manager Layman Cameron, WICU will be able to give it to them. On the next six pages LIFE shows how Erie is turning the trick.

THE WONDER OF TELEVISION drops jaw of Dickie Osborne, 8, who watches program on store-window set. Glass reflects the image off TV screen.

STATION MANAGER

Layman Cameron runs Lamb's three radio stations. He is spark plug of WICU operating staff. Says Cameron, "We want to find out what the minimum market for a television station is. By starting small and building up to Erie's level, we should be the first in the industry to know it."

ERIE'S NEW $300,000 STATION (above), which had most of its equipment installed in six weeks, was carefully planned for later expansion. As the number of set owners in the Erie area and sponsored programs increases, a mobile camera unit will be added for live telecasts outside the studio. Below—the station's only

TV cameraman Nick Luppino who, like most of WICU's personnel, had had no previous practical television experience, is dolled into shooting position. Says Station Manager Cameron, "We have deliberately chosen untrained people who won't say, 'This is the way it has to be done because this is the way we always used to do it.'"

PROGRAM DIRECTOR

Bert Gold, 31, had dabbled in radio and commercial film-making before he got his job with WICU. When Cameron found Gold once produced a minor TV show he set him to rounding up local talent for the amateur show. Gold drew sign-lettering job because he had once been sign painter.

AD SALESMAN

John Rossiter, 30, is a good salesman with no previous TV experience. Like most of staff, he works at least 12 hours a day. To make sure his live commercials come off properly, he moves mikes and props himself, even appears in show. With sponsored air time steadily increasing, Rossiter thinks the station has proved it can sell nearly anything.

STATION SECRETARY

Ruth Pipoly, 33, who has a husband and a small son, was hired as secretary to Station Manager Cameron. She soon found the job included being a switchboard operator, teletypist, make-up artist, prop hand and performer. She sees her son off to school in the morning, but her husband won't see much of her "until he buys a television set."

FIRST WEEK WAS A

WICU's opening week had everything but an elephant act. Between old movies (cackled one oldster, "I liked Scandal in Paris and Wolf Call best") and canned network shows, staff members interviewed citizens of all ages, put on live fashion shows, kids' shows and a chatty women's program featuring a lady columnist named Hy Yaple. The week wound up with the biggest show of all, an all-Erie amateur night. Almost every youngster in town who could sing, play the piano or put one foot in front of another

Inevitably one got himself up as Al Jolson (left), another pair did a deadpan adagio turn (below) and a remarkably mature 15-year-old went into a riotous operatic burlesque salvaged from her high-school "Varieties" (right). Erie-ites loved every bit of it. A farmer's wife who sandwiched TV programs in between getting supper and milking summed it up neatly for most set owners thus, "I tried to crochet once while I watched 'em, I soon saw that wouldn't work."

ELISHA MACK, 91, is interviewed by WICU Owner Lamb. Mr. Mack, who does not see or hear well, has evinced small interest "in newfangled things."

TV SETS SPROUT ALL OVER TOWN

As they have in other cities, TV sets in Erie turned up in a number of unlikely places. The sisters of St. Vincent's Hospital (above) were so obviously pleased with a set lent them by a maternity patient that the hospital's Board of Trustees bought them a table model. One ingenious woman, whose set was in the dining room but whose built-in ironing board was in the kitchen, braced a big mirror against a door jamb so she wouldn't have to miss a program while pressing the family's clothes (right). Not all set-owning problems were solved as neatly

"CRUSADE IN EUROPE"

BEGINNING THURSDAY,* MAY 5th, millions of television viewers will be able to see the first of a remarkable series of actual, on-the-spot films of the greatest war in the history of mankind.

These films bring back the suspense and heroism of the war years pictured for you in LIFE. Many of you helped make the history they record. But these particular films have never before been shown to the public. They were prepared especially for this television presentation.

Together they constitute a rare document—including official film taken by our Allies, and by our own Army, Navy, and Air Forces—film from the captured archives of our enemies—and film from the secret files of hitherto inaccessible sources.

Collected and edited by the March of Time, here is the authentic picture of World War II as told by the man who guided and led the Allies to victory in their "Crusade in Europe"—General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Critics who have previewed these films have acclaimed them as one of the greatest television events of our time—one which should add to America's understanding of history and of its own great future.

Don't miss this great and stirring document. Tune in your local television station every Thursday night,* beginning May 5th.

The Great Packager

Industrial Designer Raymond Loewy translates passion for agreeable shapes into anything from trucks to toothbrushes. Result: beauty and big sales

by JOHN KOBLER

NO product designed by Raymond Fernand Loewy, the world's most successful industrial designer or packager, has ever been more studiously packaged than Loewy himself. An aloof, soft-voiced, exquisitely tailored and barbered man of French birth, Loewy devotes almost as much attention to his own external lines as to those of, say, the seal-sleek, chromium-and-glass Studebaker body, his most influential postwar design. At 55 his appearance is controlled, as the professional phrase goes, by Turkish baths, ultraviolet rays, calisthenics and diet. This self-styling has been a lifelong Loewy preoccupation. As a 22-year-old private in World War I he designed and cut his own uniform rather than go into battle wearing what he considered inferior army issue. He also established the best-decorated dugout on the Western Front. Amid bursting grenades and barrages of poison gas, he carpeted, draped and wall-papered it with soothing materials from Paris.

Though an unchallengeably masculine specimen with an impressive war record, Loewy does not hesitate to titillate his senses with feminine fripperies. He is one of the country's most aromatic males, being given to burning incense in his office and at home and consuming caseloads of perfume, scented soap, bath oil and skin lotions. He is probably the only man in the world who ever combined deep-sea diving with an olfactory thrill.

For years he has enjoyed padding along ocean beds, peering at fish. Initially the pleasure was marred for him by the stench of oil from the pumping apparatus. He overcame this distasteful problem by mixing the oil with Chanel No. 5.

By making a career out of this urge to enhance his surroundings and beautify the objects of daily life, Loewy has become pre-eminent in industrial design. He has even been accused of inventing it, an indictment he deprecates as much as the quip that he and his leading competitors—Walter Dorwin Teague, Henry Dreyfuss and Harold Van Doren—have fomented more social unrest than Karl Marx.

Last year U.S. consumers bought more goods ($126.3 billion worth) than ever before in the history of the nation. Driving all these dollars to market are many stimuli which have nothing to do with pure need: the constant American urge to replace, the psychological compulsion to keep up with the other fellow's new car and radio, the endless blandishments of salesmanship. Behind all this looms the industrial designer, the man who creates the most important sales element in new products—their appearance. He shows manufacturers how to turn out products so much handsomer—and often so much more efficient—than existing models that the consumers feel frustrated until they own them. A blend of stylist, en-

POOR DESIGN

Overdecoration and "busy lines" characterize the poorly designed articles on this side of the picture. Some of them Loewy considers vulgar, some unfunctional, some just plain ugly. He made the selections from a group of objects which LIFE assembled for his appraisal.

ginger and poll-taker, the designer operates in the mysterious sphere of popular taste and prejudice. His tools are color, shape, texture. Few manufacturers would attempt to market as much as a hairpin without consulting him. "Between two products equal in quality, price and function," Loewy murmurs, in a ripe French accent, "the one that is esthetically correct is the one that sells." During the war he backed this credo by taking a dare from the late terrible-tempered George Washington Hill, president of the American Tobacco Company, that the Lucky Strike package could not be bettered. The terms were $20,000 down, $30,000 more if Hill liked the design. In 1941 Loewy dropped the advertising matter previously printed on the back of the package, making room back as well as front for the trademark, so that when smokers threw it away empty, no matter how it landed it would advertise itself. In 1942 he changed the package's dominant color from green to white on the theory that white has greater identity value. (The chrome in green dye being a critical war chemical, this also suggested to Hill the slogan, "Lucky Strike Green Has Gone to War.") Sales increased some 20%, and with his check for $30,000 Hill enclosed an autographed before-and-after montage of Lucky Strike packages which remains one of Loewy's most treasured mementos.

As founder and senior partner of Raymond Loewy Associates, a four-man partnership (not counting a fifth partner, who is the former Mrs. Loewy) with offices in New York, South Bend, Chicago, Los Angeles, São Paulo and London, Loewy has designed or styled hundreds of products for more than 300 clients to date. One rough estimate sets the total retail sales of all Loewy-styled products last year (for 125 clients) at $3 billion.

Out of the firm's retainers and fees—approaching $3 million gross in 1948—Loewy gets somewhat less than 50% of the net. The Loewy products range from the Firestone milk can, ball-cornered, stainless and bacteria-proof, to the output of the giant Armour and Co., including their hog cholera pills. It also includes the Studebaker car, the first postwar model to incorporate basic advances—greatly improved visibility, rear seats between instead of over the axles, black-lighted dashboard—and certain Lockheed Constellation interiors. Some of the Loewy Constellations have a gray-green color scheme supposed to eliminate airsickness. Loewy's services have even been sought by a builder of grave vaults. The great packager declined. "I cannot improve upon death," he said.

In many of the Associates' designs beauty is more than skin-deep. When the Morro Castle burned at sea with a loss of 134 lives, Loewy fell to analyzing nautical safety factors. The outcome was all-metal fittings from chairs to lamp shades, and they are now standard equipment in ships of the Panama Line. Later Loewy confronted the discomforts of the Greyhound bus. With Associate-in-Charge-of-Transportation A. Baker Barnhart, he rode hundreds of miles in buses, noting travelers' pains and aches, and conferred with an orthopedic surgeon. His new experimental Greyhound is a spacious three-level model with body-conforming seats, washroom, water cooler and clear-view compartment for the driver. In the same hardy spirit Loewy, a determined hedonist who normally rides in a custom-built, chauffeur-driven Studebaker, sat bouncing for hours behind the wheel of a 15-ton International Harvester trailer truck—to the ultimate benefit of truckers who now enjoy armrests, cross ventilation and support for their battered kidneys. Loewy's latest blue-chip client is the American President Line, which has three new 19,000-ton passenger ships building.

Everything is streamlined

WHATEVER the product, it almost always comes out of the Loewy workshops streamlined, for he has developed streamlining far beyond the ideas of its originators. In aerodynamics, the science which examines the effects of air and other gases on solid bodies passing through them, to streamline means to reduce resistance by eliminating projections. This was formerly thought to be advantageous only in bodies moving at high speed. But to Loewy the concept reflected the inherent harmony of the universe. "It satisfied one's craving for tidiness and simplification," he says, "and even if streamlining accomplished nothing else, it was justified."

The Associates' most thoroughly streamlined customer is the Pennsylvania Railroad. Loewy started in 1934 on the locomotive, whose flanks bristled like a wart hog with some 2,000 rivets. He constructed a 30-inch clay model, a procedure which enables the designer to test modifications in three dimensions as quickly as they occur to him, and demonstrated how a locomotive could be welded instead of riveted into a smooth, polished unit. The company spent $18 million building 57 of them to his style specifications. In 1936 he went on to streamline the rest of the train, not overlooking such nice details as whether the coffee cups in the dining car would spill. He perfected a nonspill cup with a steatopygous base after setting models on a rocker that oscillated at the same rate as a train and measuring the spillage to the last centigram. Passenger traffic on the improved trains increased 37% within the year. (The railroad was somewhat chagrined, however, to find that most of this increase seemed to be at the expense of other, un-Loewyized trains.) The next railroad problem he weighed was the hazard to locomotive engineers caused by smoke in their eyes. Studying his mock-up in a wind tunnel, he added a horizontal fin behind the smokestack that prevented smoke from fanning out before it passed the engineer's cab. Finally he gave the inside of the Long Island terminal a face-lifting.

Another principle which has become as much a Loewy hallmark as streamlining is "tumblehome." Tumblehome shapes have been replacing the heavy, squat style of the '30s which itself replaced the sharp, quasi-Gothic popular in the '20s. Originally a shipbuilding term used to describe how a ship's sides slope inward (they are said to "tumble," or fall, "home"), tumblehome design creates lines which, if continued, would converge in an imaginary point, as a ship's sides would. In the Studebaker, Loewy has worked in the tumblehome principle in the slant of the windshield, the center pillar and the rear window.

Some problems presented to designers, like the Long Island terminal and a fat woman's figure, are only partially soluble by streamlining or tumblehome. Fortunately these are few, and Loewy's designs often bring his clients spectacular returns. This does not astonish Loewy. "It is a poor designer," he says, "who cannot save his clients more than the fee they pay him." He concedes that style alone can accomplish this with even technically shoddy products. In an economy dependent upon replacement markets a product deliberately designed to carry the seeds of its own obsolescence is no rarity; Loewy considers the idea unspeakably immoral. "No reputable member of the profession," he testifies with asperity, "would offer a design that was less sound than he could make it within the limitations of cost, available materials and public taste. In fact his aim is a design that the manufacturer can use for years without retooling his plant. Improvement, not obsolescence—obscene word! Some products, to be sure, have already progressed beyond improvement. It is hardly possible, for instance, to improve upon the sewing needle. But there is no likelihood of economic collapse through perfection. Perfection cannot be attained overnight. One must always stop and think how much newness the public will accept. We go as far as we can short of the buyer's resistance point!"

Thus Loewy claims to be not a revolutionist but an evolutionist. He intends to adapt rather than reform. A classic illustration is the Schick electric shaver which the Associates took on in 1939. Although it then outsold all its competitors in the shaver field, its physique lacked the right connotations, as the Associates say, to make it sell even better. It was maroon-colored and Mae West-shaped, and many of its components—starting wheel, head screws, hair-catcher—stuck out all over it without affinity for each other. Associate-in-Charge-of-Products Carl Louis Otto, since resigned, to whom the operation was entrusted, diagnosed the patient's trouble as follows: "Maroon doesn't connote the cleanliness people want in a toilet article and broken surfaces don't connote the modernism they want in virtually everything."

"We advised ivory white," Otto recounts. "It's not only aseptic, but it reads well. Then we began reducing the external lines to an essential statement—an integrated, glossy-skinned monolith that would say 'shaver.' " After drawing tentative sketches Otto committed the ones he, Loewy and Schick favored to the usual modeling clay mock-ups. The offensive components were recessed and the body attenuated to a graceful airfoil of which the plug, hitherto a mere afterthought stylistically speaking, was redesigned to form an integral part. The trademark, a bull's-eye, Otto inset just below the head as a convenient thumb rest. To minimize the danger of slipping in wet hands he treaded the entire casing.

Later Schick decided to market a two-headed shaver and Otto bent again to his drawing board. The challenge here was to absorb the added bulk without coarsening the overall contours. He met it by abolishing the treads on one side. At the same time the Schick became asymmetrical. The plastic shells that join to form the casing were cast in slightly unequal dimensions, a subtlety which Otto figured would please the eye.

The humble toothbrush would not seem at first glance to provide much scope for the Associates' art, but when Pepsodent in 1940 commissioned them to style one, they managed to come up with a few new wrinkles. "There were several constants or creatively limiting factors," Loewy explains. "The handle had to fit the smallest rack in general use. The size was determined for us by Pepsodent's research staff. Also the handle had to have a hole large enough to fit many types of hooks, because there are users, especially in farm communities, who prefer to hang their toothbrushes head down instead of sticking them in racks. Some manufacturers forget these little considerations and so restrict their own market. Other constants were the size and number of the bristles, which dental experts figured out, and a length of handle which would be most comfortable to the average grasp. Altogether we were left with perhaps three variables—shape, material and color. For gracefulness we bent the head slightly, rounded all edges and pinched the body in at the waist. We chose a transparent plastic for its clean look, and a series of six sharply contrasting colors so that every member of a fair-sized family would be able to remember which was his or her toothbrush. Durability was not an important factor since a toothbrush should be replaced at least once every three months."

More recently the Associates have ventured beyond products themselves into the media that distribute them. They function the country over as business doctors or retail planners, to use their own term. This is the particular province of Associate William Snaith. When the New York department store, Lord & Taylor, projected a suburban branch in White Plains, Snaith worked on the blueprints as consultant architect.

For merchants with sluggish inventories Snaith dips into a bottomless bag of sales tricks. His theory of "contagious selling" proved a bonanza to a Buffalo emporium. It called for a sales counter in the window, practically out on the sidewalk. The sight of others buying lured hundreds of passersby inside. Soda jerks in a chain store found that their daily tips had jumped from 60¢ to $2 after the management, at Snaith's suggestion, dressed them in gold-buttoned uniforms.

The nerve center of these protean activities is the New York office, which occupies the top story and penthouse of 580 Fifth Avenue. Here, amid a welter of drawing boards, modeling clay, flow charts and sample gadgets, Loewy's partners, whose average age is 43, generate more creative heat than even their large clientele can assimilate. The surplus finds LOEWY'S HOMES are studies in his art. His New York penthouse, in which he is shown above with his second wife, Loewy describes as "an experiment in textures." He designed his four-room winter home in Palm Springs, Calif. (below) as "a study in light and color." Its main features are a swimming pool which meanders into living room and a skylight to provide moon illumination at night. He has four other homes, three of them in France.

MORE THAN LIKELY you have said that to yourself a number of times—if you're really a coffee lover.

Because, while coffee may be your favorite beverage, you realize what a bad effect the caffeine in it has on some people. How it can make them feel irritable and jumpy . . . and even keep them awake at night. Maybe it has that effect on you.

So when you feel jittery or nervous—or if you're sleepless at night—you automatically start wondering about the coffee you drink. Are you drinking too much of it? Should you cut down on it—or, much as you hate the thought, cut it out altogether for a while?

Should you? Not at all! Just drink Sanka Coffee.

So rich and full-bodied, Sanka is a grand-tasting coffee that you can drink without worry!

And yet Sanka has all the qualities of very fine coffee—the satisfying flavor—the bracing cheer.

ALL COFFEE—REAL COFFEE—

97% CAFFEIN-FREE

But the big thing is that Sanka is 97% caffeine-free. And that means worry-free! There's not the least chance of caffeine bothering you—whether you drink two cups or twelve!

So why not drink Sanka Coffee tomorrow. You have nothing to lose and possibly a great deal to gain.

Sanka Coffee

Real coffee with the worry taken out.
Drink it and sleep!

an outlet in extracurricular exertions which give the office an atmosphere something between that of an arts-and-crafts guild and a high-toned jamboree. The employees, who run to pert, shapely girls and dapper men, include amateur musicians, painters and sculptors, chess players, collectors, model builders and inventors. Most of them usually have some elaborate private projects simmering. Several of them fabricate nameless musical instruments out of odd scraps of wood and metal and tootle on them during spare moments. To prime their own morale they redecorate the place every year. Serious work proceeds to the accompaniment of radio entertainment, and the diversity of tastes requires 12 different sets. Practical joking is chronic. One of the draftsmen installed a panel in the dashboard of his car that flashes "Tilt!" in red letters when he goes around a corner. At frequent intervals the staff throws a party, with a swing band composed of house talent. At Christmas they stage a rowdy satirical revue. The traditional butt is Loewy.

From his plushy office in the penthouse the senior Associate beams upon this exuberance with the air of a proud parent among high-spirited prodigies ("Such elan, such polish!" he once boasted to an outsider. "They are incapable of committing a vulgarity"), but he seldom joins in it, being ridden with self-consciousness. Hearty sociability, the ready wisecrack make him uneasy. His partners address him as "Mr. Loewy" and he habitually addresses them by their surnames. At a business stag party he was compelled to attend Loewy, too inhibited to contribute to the merriment, turned in solemn despair to one of the Associates. "Please," said he, "say something funny."

Loewy's self-packaging is not dictated purely by vanity; it is also an application of esthetic doctrine to the human machine and its casing. The double chin, the bay window and the sprung rump outrage his deepest sensibilities, and in his own person he maintains the trimness of an actor. He somewhat resembles, in fact, Ronald Colman. He has wavy iron-gray hair, a mustache barbered to a brief black brush, hazel eyes and a thin mouth normally set in an expression of benevolent irony. He stands 5 feet 11 and weighs at his fittest 162 pounds. The faintest tremor of the bathroom scale above 162 causes him to diet violently. His formula is simple: he stops eating until he has regained his optimal measurements. For muscularity and general health he has successively tried, in addition to setting-up exercises, fencing, boxing and hiking. His interest in physical action, however, is mainly therapeutic. He shares none of the native American's enthusiasm for organized spectator sports. A colleague recalls with joy the time Loewy asked him, "What is a Dizzy Dean?"

A "Best Dressed Man" of 1941 and a perennial nominee for Man of Distinction, he has accumulated a wardrobe of about three dozen suits, featuring such sartorial confections of his own creation as hand-stitched cuffs and tuxedo lapels three-quarters reversed in satin. He changes his clothes at least three times a day. A typical medley is a sky-gray double-breasted suit, silvered necktie and salmon-pink shirt. He smokes cigarettes in a solid gold holder. "Raymond," says another colleague, "is the complete sensualist. Anything that feels good, smells good, looks good—that's his dish."

But behind his serene exterior Loewy is restless and insecure, a prey to conflict between an innate timidity and the extroversion demanded by big-business negotiations. He has numerous admiring acquaintances but no intimate friends. His satisfactions are sensory and fleeting and they require grandiose trappings. He owns six homes, scattered between California and the Riviera, but he spends no more than a month or two at a stretch in any of them.

In New York, Loewy and his second wife, a young and beautiful ex-model, live in a glittering five-room apartment off Fifth Avenue. As winter sets in they scurry to Palm Springs, Calif., where Loewy built a house in the desert with an amoeba-shaped swimming pool that meanders into the living room, to the confusion of arriving and departing guests who sometimes tumble into it. On one occasion when this happened Loewy, ever the thoughtful host, relieved his guest's embarrassment by jumping in fully clothed after him. A manservant capped the gesture by serving champagne to both of them where they stood. Part of the summer Loewy commutes by car to the New York office from an Early American mansion on Long Island, built by the original Captain Sands of Sands Point. The remainder of the season he divides between a villa on the Riviera, a Paris apartment and a 16th Century manor near Paris. This last retreat, known to historians as La Cense, is Loewy's favorite. Once inhabited by a mistress of Henri IV, it stands amid 80 acres of some of the most majestic forest scenery in France and abounds in game birds. The hunting itself, however, is not what charms Loewy, although he bows to the tradition of La Cense by toggling himself out in peaked cap and gaiters and shouldering a gun. What he really enjoys is just ambling through the estate in a seignorial mood, with two Irish setters, by name Gloucester and Tweedy, at his heels. "He generally bags a pheasant or two," a frequent guest at La Cense reports. "A Frenchman has to bring back something, you know, but mostly he's out for the atmosphere."

"Functionalism" is a term that crops up in Loewy's conversation as often as "streamline," but visitors to any of his establishments who expect to find the strictest supermodern functionalism are likely to be bewildered, for he gives the term a paradoxical interpretation which opens the door wide to random decorative caprices. "After all," he argues, "one of the functions of functionalism is appearance. Mere usefulness as an end in itself produces aridity." Accordingly, after due attention to such up-to-date contrivances as chair-side switch panels that control all the electrical paraphernalia in the room, guided light beams and dust-flow moldings, he favors familiar and even old-fashioned embellishments. There are walls covered with Victorian valentines and antique package labels, illuminated conch shells, figurines in bisque, China and papier-mâché, Oriental shrines and dragons.

Society depresses him

LOEWY is now and again identified by the gossip columnists with "international cafe society." In reality society in the mass, whether international or local, depresses him, and while he is a sporadic nightclub patron ("As an accent on life," he says), he prefers pattering quietly at home. A perfectionist, he can devote hours to the placing of a settee or the hang of a curtain. A gourmet and a talented chef, he likes, diet permitting, to concoct intricate dishes.

A few years ago Loewy began collecting modern art and now owns 30 canvases, among them a Picasso, a Pissarro and a Miro. To one item, a reproduction of a race track by Raoul Dufy, he has characteristically assigned a quasi-functional position on the wall. It is hinged at the side and when swung back discloses a television screen. The latest acquisition is a curiosity by a Flemish modern named Kermorver which, despite his fondness for it, is discreetly hung in a closet. It depicts a wedding party posing for the photographer, a conventional subject except for the bride and groom: they are naked. When he purchased the painting abroad, he was warned that U.S. Customs would never admit it. So he purified it for the trip by pasting Scotch tape over the more realistic details and painting over that.

For his esthetic perceptions he feels indebted to his father, Maximilian Loewy, Viennese by origin, cultivated, visionary and improvident. In France, where the elder Loewy grew up and married, he became a noted financial writer. Driving ambition and shrewdness are traits that were nurtured in Raymond Loewy by his mother, a hardheaded woman of solid French provincial stock, who constantly admonished him, "Far better to be envied than pitied." People who have known Loewy a long time attribute his emotional conflicts to these disparate boyhood influences.

His first glimpse of the world was an unstreamlined but impeccably appointed apartment in Paris' Opéra district. There were two older brothers, both of whom have also developed into substantial American citizens: Georges is a surgeon, Maximilian Jr., a banker. Early in life Raymond was smitten by the brave new beauty of trains, planes and automobiles, and he filled his schoolboy notebooks with sketches indicating refinements. "I always believed," he says, "that society could be industrialized without becoming ugly, and this has been my ruling philosophy." At 12 he edited, published and distributed at irregular intervals a magazine, Le Journal de Plombières, filled with his own technical drawings (price:

10 centimes; circulation: 6). Each issue was stamped "foreign rights protected." At 15 he won the J. Gordon Bennett medal, an international award for the model airplane that stayed aloft longest. His entry, a monoplane with rear propeller, flew one minute before landing intact in the Bois de Boulogne. To foster this aptitude his parents sent him to a junior college specializing in mathematics, then to another which groomed advanced students for the government school of engineering. But the war intervened.

The 8th Engineers, however, provided him with a rich variety of practical training. They had instituted a method of intercepting enemy intertrench communications by ground telegraphy which involved burying wires as near as possible to the Germans and running them back to a French receiver. Night after night Loewy would snake across No Man's Land hauling a spool of wire and a spade. He once planted his rigging within 12 feet of the Boche. The exploit won him the Croix de Guerre.

Later he installed radio sets in army planes. In fact to his knowledge the first French plane so equipped carried his hookup. The pilot was a young heavyweight boxer named Georges Carpentier. (In World War II, Raymond Loewy Associates suggested to the U.S. War Department more than 50 solutions to military problems, including antisuction boots for muddy terrain and a field hospital that could be parachuted behind the lines in sections. Mindful of the metal shortage on the home front, they also designed under their own patent a paper lipstick holder. The manufacturers sold over 40 million of them.)

Loewy was severely burned at Reims when he blundered into a cloud of yperite gas. His life was saved by an American ambulance driver who sped him through the combat zone to a hospital. The driver rejoined his own unit before the patient came to and could thank him and for months Loewy tried in vain to trace him. The episode engendered in him an abiding affection for Americans.

He emerged from the war with a captaincy, seven decorations and no money, both his parents having meantime died insolvent. Unable to resume his engineering studies, he cast about for a livelihood. Brother Georges, who had already gone to America, obtained the promise of an opening for him in the General Electric research laboratories under the great Steinmetz. It was a pregnant opportunity and Raymond, still wearing his captain's uniform, which was the only clothing he possessed, hopped a transatlantic liner. But in mid-ocean his interest was diverted.

The hat was passed for seamen's widows and orphans. After paying his passage, Loewy had exactly $40 to his name. So he drew a sketch of a fashionable lady passenger and put it up for auction as his contribution. To his stupefaction it brought $150. The purchaser, who happened to be the British Consul General, Sir Harry Gloster Armstrong, who later became British Consul General at New York, convinced the artist that his fortune lay in fashion design, and on arrival he recommended him to Publisher Condé Nast (Vogue and Vanity Fair). The Frenchman's horizon-blue uniform, his medals and his Continental allure fluttered many a heart in the Nast dovecote and his life in America, both professional and social, got off to a dazzling start from which it never retreated.

Presently he married a divorcee, Jean Thomson, who typified for him the ideal fusion of culture—Midwest American with European overlay. She was born in Nebraska City and educated in a French convent. After 14 years, during which she helped organize and run Raymond Loewy Associates, they were divorced, but on terms so amicable that she continues as a partner, one whose opinions he prizes in matters both professional and personal. When he remarried, the first Mrs. Loewy was in benign attendance at the prewedding festivities, and when, a few days later, she remarried, he showered her new menage with graceful attentions. "Raymond makes extraordinarily sophisticated gestures," a friend of both observed, "out of sentimentality."

From fashion Loewy branched out into advertising art. In ads announcing the opening of Saks's Fifth Avenue store, his first big client, in 1924, he introduced a pet principle he calls "synthetization," isolating a single simple sales point in a sea of white space. The style has since become a layout cliché, but it was a trail blazer in its day.

The iconoclast in Loewy burst forth in full vigor when Macy's hired him to decorate its show windows. A common practice of the era was to pose droves of mannikins in a jungle of merchandise—salesmanship by saturation. Working behind drawn shades one night, Loewy tossed aside all the mannikins but one, a female in a chaste evening gown, and with studied insolence dropped at her feet a mink coat. When the management recovered from the shock sharp words were exchanged, after which he quit.

$60,000 a year for the bold touch

BUT the march of progress was not to be halted. Soon the advertising departments of such conservative companies as the White Star Line and the Shelton Looms were paying Loewy $60,000 a year for the bold touch. It was the directors of Hupmobile who drew him into the lush pastures of automotive design. For a time they regretted it. Right off he proposed to slant windshields and sling the chassis lower, modifications which struck Hupmobile's engineers as wildly eccentric. To convert them he rigged a car at his own expense. They saw the light and the 1930 Hupmobile was built to his specifications. Subsequently Loewy entered a robin's-egg-blue Hupmobile roadster, streamlined from rear bumper to radiator cap, in the annual "elegance contest" at Cannes, which covered both car and driver. With the blond and soignée Madame Loewy No. 1 at the wheel, it took the grand prize for "the best aerodynamic body design" as well as six other prizes, nosing out such formidable contestants as a Rolls Royce driven by a maharani.

In his reflective moods Loewy frequently grapples with the great

Amazing Gold Seal Cleaner Lightens Spring Housework

Wipe On, Wipe Off; Dirt Disappears

New and almost unbelievable ease and convenience in Spring housecleaning is here today for America's homemakers. It's "GLASS WAX"—the amazing Gold Seal chemical that actually cleans thirty kinds of dirt in thirty seconds!

od that eliminates back-breaking scrubbing and scouring.

Yet, this pink liquid contains no harsh abrasives to scratch the smoothest surface. No messy water is needed, no streaks or smears are left by fast, easy "GLASS WAX" housekeeping.

"GLASS WAX" is available in pint, quart, and gallon pink cans at grocery, drug, hardware variety, and department stores across the country.

Quarts Save Twenty Cents

Thrifty shoppers are elated to learn that by buying "GLASS WAX" in the quart can, they save twenty cents. Moreover there are so many uses for this Gold Seal marvel cleaner in every home, the quart size brings extra convenience by assuring a more adequate supply on hand and by lessening the bother of frequent shopping.

Eliminates Variety of Cleansers

Another important feature to busy women is that "GLASS WAX" eliminates the need of storing and handling a variety of household cleansers, each for a separate job. And, since "GLASS WAX" is as neat as it is easy objects may be cleaned where they are used, rather than carried to and from the kitchen for cleaning.

Arthur Godfrey Shows How "GLASS WAX" Takes a Shine to Windows

"You can't see them but they're still there," says popular Arthur Godfrey, star of the daily Gold Seal Radio Show. That's actually how clean "GLASS WAX" makes windows! For this sensational pink liquid removes all soil and grime from the dirtiest window, then polishes the glass to an undreamed of brilliance and clarity—all in the same fast, easy action.

Just wipe "GLASS WAX" on—wipe it off. Chemicals, not hard rubbing, do the work.

Arthur Godfrey is heard Monday through Friday over a nationwide network of 166 CBS stations. Sponsored by the makers of "GLASS WAX," the Gold Seal Show includes both lovely Janette Davis and the Mariners Quartet to sing your favorite songs, and Archie Bleyer's Orchestra.

Instant Gleam For Chrome, Nickel

Spring clean-up means more than just housecleaning. For now's the time that beckoning weather reminds one of outdoor pleasures ahead—golf, fishing, boating, and other sports.

"GLASS WAX" is a wonder at brightening metal equipment that's lain for months in dusty, smoky basement or attic. Steel shafts and faces of golf clubs, aluminum and chrome fishing tackle, outboard motors, brasswork on boats—instantly lose grime and stain, emerge glistening clean.

Just wipe "GLASS WAX" on, wipe it off—30 kinds of dirt that spoil the treasured lustre of metal surfaces disappear.

The family car, too, needs its Spring cleaning. "GLASS WAX" is just as fast, just as easy in restoring immaculate brilliance to all chrome and nickel trim, from bumper to bumper.

Crystal-Clear Film Guards Future Beauty

Source of a major portion of the praise heaped upon "GLASS WAX" is the invisible coating this remarkable chemical leaves as it cleans. This unseen film actually seals out dust and smudge from every surface that "GLASS WAX" has brightened. Thus, in addition to its speed and simplicity of use, "GLASS WAX" lengthens the interval between necessary cleanings, and makes the next cleaning easier.

imponderable of his calling: the psychological factors that attract the consumer to one shape or color rather than another. Why did the Airflow Chrysler, a Norman Bel Geddes design embodying the latest wrinkles in aerodynamics, find few takers? (Because it was too advanced for public taste?) Why is toothpaste sold in tubes, not in jars? (Because it is more sensuous to squeeze than to dig?) Although Loewy scores high accuracy in gauging consumer response, his judgment is based on empiric, not scientific, knowledge. Ohio, for example, is sometimes studied by industrial designers as a guinea pig state. They have learned that if the women of Ohio favor brown hats, brown is probably a safe color for vacuum cleaners. But nobody ever succeeded in reducing such observations to an exact science. The prospect fascinates Loewy, who suspects it would lead the student into the realm of Freudian fetishes.

"Psychiatrists tell me," he says, "that shapes arouse all kinds of unconscious associations, and the simpler the shape the more pleasurable the associations. Maybe this is why products in the shape of cubes, spheres, columns, polyhedrons seem to sell better than more complex designs. Take the humble jelly mold. Of all varieties the plain mound or breast shape has always been the most popular. The unconscious may also explain the tactile value of many materials. Part of the success of plastics may lie in their warmth and fleshiness to the touch."

Among the shapes and textures for which Loewy claims this tactile satisfaction are brandy snifters ("Watch people fondle them; they may not be aware of it, but they are having a grand time"), Morris chairs ("They positively embrace their passengers"), cellophane-wrapped paper cigaret packages rather than sharp-edged cardboard ones ("Soft and glossy to the touch and yielding to pressure"), round instead of square cakes of soap. He is also devoted to home furnishings that exude a hushed, boudoirlike atmosphere, such as quilted walls, satiny furniture coverings, acoustical ceiling tiles, rubber mats under carpets. He was one of the first telephone subscribers to install a new bell which emitted a crystalline tinkle instead of a shrill jangle. "Really a delight to listen to," says Loewy. In illumination he loves shadows and highlights, hates complete diffusion. His greatest aversions are telephone booths ("The doors either pinch you or push you, the phones are greasy from other human hands, the interiors are as harsh and narrow as coffins"), taxis, city buses and subways.

A caller once found Loewy gazing raptly at a dozen hen's eggs which he had arranged on a mantle amid a cluster of ivory bric-a-brac. "A friend sent them to me from his farm," Loewy explained, "but I can't bear to eat them. So beautiful in conception! The functionally perfect form, the symbol of progress! If the egg were any other shape, the life of the hen would be intolerable."

Loewy broods a good deal about the callipygian Coca-Cola bottle, which was designed 34 years ago by Alexander Samuelson. Though in full retreat from streamline principles, it remains the queen of soft-drink containers. But then, Loewy points out, its shape is aggressively female—a quality that in merchandise, as in life, sometimes transcends functionalism.

A woman with dark hair, wearing a short-sleeved, knee-length dress with a black and white geometric pattern, stands with her eyes closed and a serene expression. To her left is a large, flowing fabric with a vibrant, multi-colored pattern of stylized leaves and flowers in shades of pink, orange, green, and brown. The background is a dark, textured green.

Canvas or camera?

IT'S A MATTER OF CHOICE . . . whether the lens or the brush makes the "best" pictures . . . for no art seems "best" to every critic!

Similarly, no single brand of whiskey can seem best to everyone. That's why we take the common-sense attitude that Hunter's delicately different flavor will appeal to a great many men, but not necessarily to all men. It's a matter of choice!

We do sincerely believe you should try this fine whiskey. Try it because it is different. Try it and form your own opinion!

BIGELOW IN HIS BELFRY TIGHTENS BOLTS THAT HAVE BEEN LOOSENEED BY HIS PLAYING. HE HIMSELF MADE 14 OF THE BELLS IN PRINCETON'S 49-BELL CARILLON

PRINCETON'S BELLMASTER

A U.S. college professor is one of the world's best carilloneurs

Once every Sunday afternoon a college professor named Arthur Bigelow darts up a steep spiral staircase to the beltry in top of Cleveland Tower at Princeton University's Graduate College, shuts himself in a box the size of a piano case and begins to play his bells. For an hour their booming music is heard for miles. Then he reluctantly shuts his box, climbs slowly down and waits for next Sunday to come around.

At 39, Bigelow, who is Princeton's bellmaster, is one of the finest bell designers and carilloneurs in the world. He fell in love with bells as a boy, when he heard them in Springfield, Mass., and in 1930 he went abroad to study them for a year. But he stayed for 11, made a careful study of Europe's carillons and was bellmaster of the great church of St. Peter's in Louvain, Belgium, when the Germans drove him out in 1940. Now he teaches engineering at Princeton, plays his bells on Sunday, and spends the rest of his time making more bells.

ON HIS BIKE, which he rode out of Belgium ahead of Germans, Bigelow rides away from Cleveland Tower.

Bellmaster CONTINUED

MAKING A BELL, Bigelow first designs it from a chart which he invented. Chart's curves show him all the ideal proportions of a bell for any given tone.

FIRST STEP is to make plaster core shaped like inside of bell. Here rough core is turned into exact shape against metal template made from his design.

NEXT STEP, after waxing core, is to fit on new template shaped like outside of bell (above). The gap between template and core is filled with plaster.

PLASTER BELL is gently separated from waxed core. This bell will now be cast in bronze, will sound a D note and weigh about 90 lb. It will be worth $200.

speaking of LIFE...

Outside the U. S. A.—Your fellow LIFE readers overseas get the International Edition. Its fast-climbing circulation is now over 350,000—up 100,000 in the last year. LIFE International subscriptions, which come in from every part of the globe (with the exception of the U.S.S.R.), are paid for in twenty-nine different currencies. Sales at newsstands from Iceland to India involve almost every type of national coinage in the world. People stepping up for their newsstand copies pay in won, baht, fil, shillings, aurar, kurus, pesos, francs, guilders and scores of other coins. Letters from overseas readers—many of them business and professional leaders—indicate a great eagerness to learn more about the American way of life, portrayed so graphically in LIFE International. Copies are passed along from family to family, from town to town and sometimes from country to country. With an average of ten readers for every copy, each issue reaches over three million people with its editorial news of America and the whole world—with its advertising news showing the products of U. S. industry.

One Year, Two Men, Five Wars—Having covered 92,000 miles and his fifth war in a year, Correspondent Roy Rowan, head of LIFE's Shanghai office, is having a brief breather in New York. He and LIFE Photographer Jack Birns are the whirlwind team who have kept LIFE readers abreast of the complicated happenings throughout the Orient in the past year—with such exclusive picture stories as the "Fall of Mukden" (LIFE, Nov. 8, 1948), "The Siege of Taiyuan" (Nov. 22, 1948) and "War in Burma" (April 11, 1949). "For transportation," Rowan reports, "we used anything that looked as if it could get off the ground so long as it gave promise of taking us in the direction where news was brewing. Most of the time we traveled as cargo. A friendly pilot would obligingly leave a few sacks of flour behind and let us climb in instead. Sometimes we would wangle a ride on an airdrop mission or with troops bound for the front in one of the shooting wars we covered."

The most picturesque pilots, Rowan says, are the Indians, who wear snoods over their beards to keep them from getting tangled by the wind. The most daredevil ones they met were a couple of French flyers who piloted the two planes which carried the LIFE team into the jungle to interview the Caodaist "pope" (LIFE, March 7, 1949). With Birns in one plane and Rowan in the other, the pilots engaged in an aerial game of tag to see how close they could come together without hitting. It set Rowan's teeth really chattering when he saw that he could tell time on Birns' wrist watch in the other plane.

On another jungle mission—this time in Malaya during the terrorist wave—Birns and Rowan found themselves caught in dangerous crossfire and took shelter in a creek. Later they learned that there were twenty or so unexploded grenades right where they were crouching. But they came out with exclusive pictures of the violent end of the terrorist leader, Lau Yew, who was killed with ten of his henchmen (LIFE, August 2, 1948).

In Hyderabad to get an interview with the Nizam, the world's richest ruler, they were amused to be followed by secret police, who thought they were spies sent in by India. After three weeks of knocking daily on the palace door Birns and Rowan got the first press interview the Nizam had granted in years. They left for New Delhi in style, in the Nizam's private plane. They were far from amused when the Indian police picked them up as spies of the Hyderabad government, arrested them and confiscated their hard-won pictures. LIFE's New York office went to work on the situation, the Indian Embassy in Washington wired Nehru, and two days later the films and story were on a plane bound for the U. S. and the pages of LIFE (Sept. 27, 1948).

Last month, Jack Birns received the Overseas Press Club of America's 1948 award for the "best picture reporting from abroad, judged from its interpretative quality."

Since 1945—Do you know that approximately 5,400,000 copies of LIFE are now sold each week? This is almost a million and a half more than were coming from LIFE's presses in 1945. During these four years since V-J Day, some remarkable new efficiencies in the mechanics of publishing LIFE have been achieved. They are the result of an extensive long-range program set up in anticipation of today's continuing demand for more and more copies of LIFE and its sister publications, TIME and FORTUNE. Already completed and in operation is additional machinery for making LIFE's quality machine-coated paper in plants located in Portland, Oregon; Biron, Wisconsin; Escanaba and Kalamazoo, Michigan; Bucksport, Maine; Houston, Texas; Deferiet, New York. Twenty-one huge new presses of various types have been installed at Chicago, Buffalo, Los Angeles, and Philadelphia. Ink-making facilities have been expanded by two new plants—in Chicago and in Ridgeway, New Jersey. To handle subscriptions more speedily and efficiently, an entirely mechanized operation has been developed and installed. In addition, two research laboratories which were set up in Kalamazoo, Michigan and in Springdale, Connecticut, are working on a continuing program of improving the mechanics and quality of printing. The entire four-year project, representing an investment of about $50,000,000 shared by Time, Inc. with manufacturers and suppliers, will be physically completed early this summer, resulting in an all-time high in efficiency in the mechanical operations of LIFE.

NEW POLICE DRAMA IS SUPERREALISTIC REPORTING

Thirty-seven years ago, when David Belasco, the dean of Broadway producers, was in his heyday, he put on a play in which real eggs were fried on the stage. Audiences, who could hear, see and smell the eggs frying, were carried away. Since then the fried-egg tradition of realism has dominated Broadway, often at the expense of more imaginative drama. But every now and then it produces excellent dramatic reporting, notably by Playwright Sidney Kingsley. His Men in White (1933) was a literal view of a big hospital; Dead End (1935) took place on a New York slum street; The World We Make (1939) had a steam laundry on the stage. Now Kingsley has done another top job of reporting in a play called Detective Story, which presents a remarkably realistic view of a New York police station.

The new play's hero, powerfully acted by Ralph Bellamy, is a detective whose love of justice is poisoned by sadistic hatred for every offender, petty or otherwise, who falls in his trap. He meets defeat when he finds his wife once had an illegal operation by an abortionist whom he has arrested and beaten up. Unable to show mercy even for his wife whom he loves, the detective finally invites death by standing in the way of a gunman. As a parable of love and hate, Detective Story is fair drama. But its real worth lies in Kingsley's genius for detail and in its roster of criminals who are shown at left in front-and-side-view rogues' gallery portraits.

A LINE-UP in a New York City station is staged by the detective (left) in order to get a woman to identify an abortionist (third from right). She fails to pick out the criminal and the detective has not sufficient evidence against him.

WITH A BRUTAL KICK in the stomach, the detective, angered by his failure to get evidence, orders the unscrupulous abortionist out of town. Later he finds out that this abortionist had operated on his wife before their marriage.

A DEAD 4-FOOT COTTONMOUTH DANGLES FROM "J.C." BOUDREAUX'S GUN AS HE HUNTS SNAKES BY THE BAYOU

Bayou Boy

"Louisiana Story's" star is a real-life Huck Finn

In the bayou country of Louisiana a couple of years ago, Director Robert Flaherty found a boy to act in his movie Louisiana Story—a dark, quiet Cajun lad named Joseph Carl Boudreaux, called "J. C." by everybody. The film finished, J. C. went back to his home in the swamps while Louisiana Story became one of the best movies of 1948. This spring LIFE Photographer George Silk went down to Louisiana to see what had happened to the boy star.

He found J. C., who eventually will get $3,000 for his acting, still living in a wilderness backwater, on a little rise of land called Little Pecan Island. J. C. quit school when film shooting started and has since tried his hand unsuccessfully at his stepfather's work of trapping muskrats. Now 15, he spends most of his time tramping and paddling through the fetid swamps, hunting poisonous snakes for sport and game for food, leading a kind of Huck Finn life—slow, solitary, close to nature and very far away from the hustling world of movies and 20th Century America.

THE MOVIE Louisiana Story begins with J.C. paddling on a bayou.

Bayou Boy CONTINUED

IN THE SWAMPS J.C. and dog Ma go hunting. The family lives to a great extent on food that J.C. and his father shoot: ducks, geese, giant bullfrogs, rabbits, even blackbirds. J.C. also hunts alligators whose hides sometimes bring as much as $2.50 a foot.

ON THE BAYOU J.C. paddles along (below) the way he did in the opening scene of Louisiana Story, on lookout for snakes, turtles, bullfrogs. At right, he hurls his throwing net to catch mullet which he will use as bait for catfish—a staple of the family's diet.

J. C. AND HIS MOTHER bounce about their living room—dining room—kitchen as he shows her how he square-danced with his girl friend at a high school dance.

The big new refrigerator and stove, his home's proudest ornaments, were bought by J. C. with the first $1,000 of the $1,000 he is to get for his work in the film

J. C. AND HIS SISTER Joyce race madly about the yard in front of the house. Joyce, a year younger than J.C., left school last year when her mother was sick and needed help. She helps keep house, takes charge of the pigs and the fruit trees. J.C.'s stepfather traps muskrats and is caretaker of an oilman's hunting lodge.

TOP ARMY CAREER MAN, Chief of Staff Omar N. Bradley, hits the new Army career guidance plan, stressing scientific yet human personnel management.

ABLE PLANNERS like Capt. George H. Collins work to fit the right man in the right job—classifying, assigning and advancing career soldiers.

MANY crack junior officers like 1st Lt. Arnold F. Frank were enlisted men. Now they are instructing, counselling... putting teeth in the Army's career guidance system.

NON-COMMISSIONED LEADERS like M. Sgt. Adolph E. Kurtz know Army operation "inside out"—like snafu and precision can look to Warrant Officer grades for advancement.

HIGHER Army entrance standards mean new competition for skilled technical jobs in the Ground Forces. Sgt. 1st Cl. Gayford B. Edwards has risen rapidly in his career field.

SMILING PRODUCT of intensive basic training, Pvt. Jerome Herbert begins his Army career. He'll learn varied skills, have unequalled travel and retirement opportunities.

OUTSIDE HIS HOME J.C. brushes his teeth. Until the movie job began, the four-room house had few comforts. Tanks standing against wall at right contain butane gas for the new refrigerator and stove the movie money bought.

IN THE MOVIES at nearby Abbeville, J.C. sees himself for the first time on the screen in Louisiana Story and then bursts into a peal of delighted laughter. Sitting next to him is Lionel Le Blanc, who played his father in the film.

ON THE STREETS of Abbeville, after the showing, J.C. (second from left) stands with a few of his friends. A group of admiring girls keep their distance. J.C. was kept busy for two hours posing for snapshots and signing autographs.

Magic Handle

The SINGER exclusive "magic handle" puts all controls within finger-tip reach. And that includes AUTOMATIC CORD CONTROL—the wonderful, new SINGER feature that ends tiresome winding and unwinding of cord on old-fashioned hooks.

SINGER Automatic Cord Control lets you pull out extra cord as you need it. Then push the magic button, and zip!—your cord disappears—out of your way as you clean!

PLUS ALL THESE WONDERFUL SINGER EXTRAS!

Gets more dirt, gets it faster. Because the SINGER has Dual Suction—2 fans instead of 1. Another SINGER exclusive.

New "floating" brush adjusts automatically to most rug thicknesses. Ends the trouble and guesswork of adjusting brush by hand or foot pedals.

More cleaning power when you need it. 2-speed switch for light and heavy cleaning.

No more foot-pedal acrobatics. SINGER magic handle adjusts to any position you like.

So easy to store! Hangs flat in closet!

So easy to carry with midway hand-grip!

Unit is only 5 inches high! Gets under most furniture!

New "all-around" bumper protects furniture—never smudges!

SEE IT TODAY!

For your protection. SINGER sells its sewing machines, vacuum cleaners and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never through department stores, dealers or other outlets.

FANCY NAPKIN-FOLDING

Skillful waiters in Rangoon's Strand Hotel make birds and flowers out of table linens

FOLDING STARTS with Mohammed holding starched linen napkin in his teeth.

CORNERS ARE ROLLED to center. Paper is used for cleanliness.

MANY OF WHICH APPEAR ABOUT TO TAKE OFF FROM THE DINING TABLE

For more than 15 years Mohammed Afiruddin, the impressive Bengalese waiter at right above, has got up in the Burmese dawn every day and set to work folding a large stack of heavily starched linen napkins in Rangoon's Strand Hotel. Several hours later he is surrounded by a flock of napkins folded in the shapes of birds, flowers, fans and peculiar geometrical figures, enough to adorn the Strand's 60 tables for the rest of the day. The napkins are so intricately and beautifully done that many tourists have preferred to go through their meals napkinless rather than disturb the perfection of his designs merely to wipe their mouths.

ROLL IS FOLDED near the end. Shorter end will form bird's tail.

DROPPED INTO A GLASS, the napkin is made ready for finishing touches.

BIRD'S HEAD is fashioned by tying a knot in end of napkin. Mohammed often gives added filip to the bird's head by decorating it with a flower petal.

FINISHED BIRD is admired by its creator. Bird like this takes about two minutes to make. Mohammed, 45, comes from Bengal province in east India.

Blatz is Milwaukee's Finest Beer"

says BRIAN DONLEVY,
Star of Amusement Enterprise's "THE LUCKY STIFF"

"I grew up in Sheboygan Falls, served in the Wisconsin National Guard, lived in Milwaukee," says Mr. Donlevy. "So, when I say that, of all Milwaukee's superb beers, Blatz is the finest, you can take my word for it. I lived there...I ought to know."

"Like my taste for Blatz Beer, my interest in flying is an enthusiasm of long standing...and one I put to frequent use now that I practically commute to my tungsten mine up in the Mojave Mountains."

"At my home here in Malibu I like to work around the house, garden and citrus grove. It's a form of recreation made all the more enjoyable by a refrigerator always stocked with Blatz, Milwaukee's finest beer."
